1890 for custody of the minor who, he alleged, was now in the custody of the mother. He also prayed that an order be issued directing the mother to produce the child in Court on the next date of hearing, 1-3-1947. No notice of this application was issued to the appellant but an order directing the production of the child was issued and the child was produced in Court on 1-3-1947, on which day the oral statements of the parties' counsel were recorded, the documentary evidence was produced and arguments were heard, since neither party produced any oral evidence. On 14-3-1947, the learned District Judge delivered his judgment by which he dismissed the application praying for the appointment of Mr. Kunwar Krishna as guardian but he granted the application for the return of the child to the custody of the father.

[4] The mother of the minor, being aggrieved by the order, has come to this Court in appeal and I have heard the learned advocates for the parties at considerable length. The learned District Judge has carefully surveyed the facts of the case and the law on the subject and normally I would not interfere with the exercise of discretion by him but the judgment of the learned District Judge discloses that, while he has held that, in an application under S. 25, Guardians and Wards Act, it is the interests of the minor that are primarily to be considered in disposing of the case, he has laid greater emphasis on the rights of the father. Moreover, the record discloses that the complaint of the appellant's learned advocate that he had no notice of the application under S. 25 is well founded. I have, therefore, carefully considered the case of the parties myself.

[5] The first thing that calls for notice is the fact that, in an application under S. 25 of Act 8 [VIII] of 1890, the sole criterion is the minor's welfare. It is only if the Court is of opinion that "it will be for the welfare of the ward to return to the custody of his guardian" that it can pass an order for such return. The rights of the guardian should not weigh at all though, since in all legal systems rules relating to guardianship are framed with a view to protect the interests of minors, it may be presumed that, if the law gives the guardianship to a particular person, it is in the interests of the minor that that person should have custody of his person. This presumption does not, however, carry us very far in the present case, because other circumstances which have arisen cannot be ignored.

[6] Firstly, we have the fact that the mother and father of the minor are living separately. The Hindu jurists did not contemplate divorce or separation between the parents. Thus when the right was conferred on the father, the right of the mother to have custody of the minor was not excluded. The father and mother were thought of as living together and being in fact parts of one body and consequently the custody of the father would be the custody of the mother. Unfortunately that is far from being true in the present case and, therefore, a choice has to be made between the father and mother. In making this choice it is not the right of the two parents that will determine the decision of the Court nor even who is at fault for the present sorry state of affairs but what, in the circumstances of the case as they actually exist, is for the welfare of the minor.

[7] The minor was a child of about four years at the time that the application was made. He is now a little over five years. All this time he has been living with his mother, and while she was away in England, with his maternal grand parents and uncle. He has seen his father only once during all this time. It is perfectly true that the father is not at fault for this. He made every attempt to get the minor's mother herself to go and live with him and it was the mother who refused to go. Nevertheless, the facts are as they have been stated.

[8] Then we have the fact that the father has married again and the minor consequently has a step-mother. A Hindu may have several wives and, in the circumstances of the present case, Mr. Kunwar Krishna cannot be blamed for having married again after all his attempts to persuade his wife to return had failed and he had waited for her for about four years. It is also true that a step-mother may well look after her step-children better than the real mother. Nevertheless this is the exception rather than the rule and, in a case very similar to the present, A. I. R. 1941 Bom. 103,[1] Beaumont C. J., with whom Wadia J. agreed, said:

"Human nature is much the same all the world over, and in my opinion if the mother is a suitable person to take charge of the child, it is quite impossible to find an adequate substitute for her for the custody of a child of tender years."

and again,

"The parents unfortunately are not living together, and probably will not live together, because the father has contracted marriage with another woman. That under Hindu law he is entitled to do, but it is difficult to suppose that a step-mother, whose age we are told is about 17, is likely to be a good substitute for the natural mother, whilst the father himself will have other occupations and will have to entrust the actual upbringing and charge of a child of this age to somebody else. In my opinion, there is not the slightest doubt that the natural mother is the proper person to have the custody of the child, and there is no evidence before the Court to justify us in thinking that she is not a proper person to have that custody."

[9] In that case the Court refused to return the minor to the custody of the father although it had been removed from that custody in circumstances which savoured of kidnapping and the mother was a tuberculosis patient who had—unlike the present case—no income of her own but depended upon her parents.

[10] In 13 Avadh Cases 140,[2] also the fact that the father had married another wife with whom he was living weighed greatly with the learned Judicial Commissioner in not giving the father custody of the child. There was no other disqualification of the father and the only difference in the case was the fact that the boy was 13 years old and preferred to live with the mother. The learned Judicial Commissioner said:

"In considering what will be for the welfare of the minor, the Court is to have regard to the age, sex and religion of the minor, the character and capacity of the proposed guardian and his nearness of kin to the minor, the wishes, if any, of the deceased parent and any existing or previous relations of the proposed guardian with the minor or his property; and if the minor is old enough to form an intelligent preference, the Court may consider that preference. It appears to me that other things being equal and the minor not expressing or being old enough to express an intelligent preference the Court should decide in favour of the person who is entitled to the custody of the minor under the law to which minor is subject. My decision in Miscellaneous Appeal No. 52 of 1906 does not go beyond this and does not appear to me to conflict with any reported decision of which I am aware. It has been held in several cases that a Court is not bound to appoint the person who is entitled to the custody of the minor under the law to which the minor is subject. I agree. I think that it is clear that the paramount consideration is the welfare of the minor. In the present case it is impossible to say that there is anything definite against the father, but it is probable that the minor will be happier with his own mother than with his step-mother."

[11] Similarly in 4 A. L. J. 22[3] the contest as to the custody of a minor girl was between the father who had married again and the maternal grandmother, the mother being dead. The learned Judges refused to deliver the child to the custody of the father and remarked:

"It is true that there is nothing against the father but again it is an admitted fact that he has married a second time and the girl will have to go under the control of a step-mother, of whom probably she knows nothing. We cannot think that the girl under these circumstances will be so happy as she is in the house of the maternal grandmother."

[12] The same view was taken in 22 M. L. J. 68[4] and in A. I. R. 1922 Bom. 405[5] the learned Judges say:

"The petitioner has married again, and it is obvious that the boy, who was only seven years old at the time this application was made, will be much better off living with his mother than with his father. No suggestion whatever has been made as to the character of the mother, which would be good ground for taking away the boy from her tender care and handing him over to the father who would be a perfect stranger to him. The step-mother cannot be expected to be very much interested in his welfare, and the uncles and any members of the prior generation who may be living in the house will also not be likely to give this small boy the attention and sympathy which he naturally requires."

[13] The learned advocate for the respondent relied upon A. I. R. 1939 Lah. 359[6] for the view that the presence of a step mother is no hindrance to the grant of custody. The facts of that case were, however, very different. In that case the mother too had married again and at the time of separation from her husband she had agreed to hand over the child to the father. Thus there was a step-mother on one side and a step-father on the other and in those circumstances the Court ordered that the father should have the custody.

[14] On a consideration of the principles, enunciated in the decisions which I have mentioned, in the circumstances of the present case the child should be allowed to remain with its mother.

[15] The learned advocate for the respondent apprehended that the child could not be brought up according to the traditions of the father's family. There does not seem to be any ground for this apprehension. Both the parties belong to respectable families and the mother is an educated lady. Her father and brother are both doctors. The child is the appellant's only child and, if the relations with the husband continue as at present, she is not likely to have another. There is no reason to suppose that she will not give the best care and attention to her son. It is true that one of the objections which she had to marriage with Mr. Kunwar Krishna was the conservativeness of his family but times change and it does not appear that the child will lose by discarding some at least of this conservativeness. Further such orders are of a temporary character and, if at any time it should appear that the appellant is not giving that care and attention to the child which is expected of her and is not giving the child a proper education, it will always be open to the respondent to move the Court for a proper order.

[16] I should also like to point out that though, in the present case, I do not consider that the circumstances justify an order entrusting the child to the respondent, he is nevertheless entitled to have access to his child. It is to be hoped that the parties will be able to arrange the method in which this access will be regulated. If, unfortunately, they are unable to do this, the matter will again have to be brought before the District Judge so that he may arrange the circumstances in which the father can have access to his child.

[17] The appellant's learned advocate also took the plea of jurisdiction, contending, firstly that the District Judge of Bareilly had jurisdiction and not the District Judge of Lucknow. This ground was not taken in the Court below and it depends upon the facts which may be found. It cannot be raised for the first time in appeal.

[18] The second plea is based on the fact that the child has, in this case, never been in the custody of its father and so the language of S. 25 of ACT S [VIII] of 1890 does not apply. There is a considerable conflict of authority on this point but the view which has always prevailed in Avadh is that even in such cases the minor is in the constructive custody of the guardian de jure since he is in the custody of the other person with the express or implied consent of the guardian, and that consequently S. 25 applies: vide 21 Avadh Cases 194,[7] 1 O. W. N. 330[8] and 1935 O. W. N. 1096.[7] I am bound by this view, nor do I see any good reason to doubt its correctness. In view of what I have said about the first point, however, the appeal must be allowed. I accordingly allow this appeal and set aside the order of the District Judge, Lucknow. The application of the respondent for the custody of the minor is rejected. The appellant will get her costs from the respondent.

Salik Ram and others — Defendants — Appellants v. Subedar Singh, Plaintiff and another, Defendant — Respondents.

Second Appeal No. 188 of 1942, Decided on 17-11-1947, against order of Addl. Civil Judge, Sitapur, D/- 20-2-1942.

(a) U. P. Tenancy Act (17 [XVII] of 1939), S. 206 —Grove-holder has right to sell trees—Custom to contrary is immaterial.

Under S. 206 it is the interest of the grove-holder which is transferable and so every holder of interest of the grove-holder and not only the grove-holder himself, can exercise the right of transfer. Where therefore the interest of a grove-holder who has planted the trees has devolved on his son under S. 206 (d), the son can sell the trees to a third person. [Para 3]

Interest is a comprehensive term which covers all the legal rights possessed by the owner. If the owner can part with his whole interest in a thing it will be absurd to say that he cannot sell merely a portion of it. The previous decisions in suit between the zamindar and the grove-holder recognizing a custom to the contrary do not operate as res judicata in view of clear provision in S. 206. [Paras 4, 5]

(b) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 11 — Prior decision — Change of law — Prior decision on particular question between particular parties — Change of law — Prior decision does not operate as res judicata on same question between same parties.

Every case must be decided on the law that prevails at the time of decision and not according to the law at any other previous time. Any decision in a previous suit on a particular question between particular parties will not operate as res judicata on the same question between the same parties when a different law is in force: 19 A. Judgment.—This is the defendants' second appeal against the decree dated 20-2-1942, of Mr. Avadh Behari Lal, Additional Civil Judge, Sitapur.

[2] The plaintiff-respondent Subedar Singh filed a suit for possession of two fallen trees in grove No. 948/666 situated in village Bhatpurwa belonging to Bhagwandin, defendant 4, alleging that he had bought the trees from Bhagwandin, the grove-holder and had cut the trees and wished to remove them but defendants 1 to 3, Salik Ram, Sheo Darshan and Kalka Prasad, who were zamindars, had prevented him from removing the trees. He prayed also for a permanent injunction against the appellants. The appellants said that Bhagwandin had no right of transfer under a custom prevailing in the village, but he was merely a licencee with a right to enjoy the fruits of the trees, that in previous litigation of 1925 between the predecessors of the parties and also in 1936 between the parties it had been decided that Bhagwandin could not sell the trees of the grove according to the custom. The trial Court held that the trees in dispute had fallen down and had been sold by Bhagwandin to the plaintiff, that Bhagwandin had a right to transfer the trees, that the custom which prohibited him from selling trees was no longer a bar by virtue of S. 206, U. P. Tenancy Act, and notwithstanding the previous litigation between the defendants inter se Bhagwandin could sell the trees, and accordingly decreed the suit. The appellants urged the same objections before the lower appellate Court but the finding of the Munsif were confirmed and the appeal was dismissed.

[3] It has been urged that Bhagwandin, defendant 4 is not a grove-holder within the meaning of S. 205, U. P. Tenancy Act of 1939, as admittedly he had not planted the grove and so he could not sell the trees in exercise of the powers under S. 206, U. P. Tenancy Act. This contention is wrong and is not warranted by the provisions of S. 206 (c) which clearly lays down that the interest of a grove-holder shall be transferable by voluntary transfer or in execution of a decree of a civil or revenue Court or otherwise. It is the interest of the grove-holder which is transferable and so every holder of interest of the grove-holder and not grove-holder himself can exercise the right of transfer. In order that the right under S. 206 should be exercised all that is necessary to show is that it is the interest of a grove-holder which is to be transferred. Under S. 205, Tenancy Act, a grove-holder must necessarily be a person who has planted a grove. If it can be shown that the grove had been planted by a predecessor of Bhagwandin, defendant 4 then obviously the transfer by him is valid. In 1925 admittedly there was a suit regarding this very grove between Ram Charan, the father of defendants 1 to 3 and Baldeo father of defendant 4, and it appears from the judgment of the trial Court, EX. A-13, that Baldeo had claimed as a defence in the suit that he had planted the grove after the first settlement, and the custom relied on by the plaintiff Ram Charan that grove-holders are entitled only to the fruits of the trees did not apply to groves planted after the first settlement. This point is clearly brought out in the discussion on Issue NO. 2 in the case in the body of the judgment EX. A-13. Baldeo had clearly claimed that he had planted the grove as will appear in para. 8 of his written statement, EX. A-12. It was said for the appellants that this document has been denied by the plaintiff and it had not been proved by any evidence and the document not being a certified copy of a public document it should not have been admitted in evidence. Such an argument comes with ill grace from the appellants whose document it was. The Court admitted it in evidence and exhibited it, and any objection to its admissibility could have been raised by the plaintiff only. In that suit of 1925 clearly it was not challenged that Baldeo had planted the grove. It is thus clear that Baldeo, the father of Bhagwandin, defendant 4, was the grove-holder within the meaning of S. 205, U. P. Tenancy Act. On the death of Baldeo, his interest devolved on Bhagwandin, defendant 4, his son under S. 206 (d), U. P. Tenancy Act. The plaintiff thus acquired the interest in the two trees by sale from Bhagwandin.

[4] It was urged that selling two trees does not amount to transferring an interest in the grove. This contention also has no force. Interest is a comprehensive term which covers all the legal rights possessed by the owner. If the owner can part with his whole interest in a thing it will be absurd to say that he cannot sell merely a portion of it. There is, therefore, no valid reason why the holder of the interest of a grove-holder cannot part with a fraction of such interest.

[5] It was also urged that there was a custom whereby Bhagwandin defendant 4 could not sell the trees and this custom was recognized in the previous litigation of 1925 and 1936 between the parties and these decisions operate as res judicata. Admittedly the decisions did no more than recognize a custom. Now, S. 206, Tenancy Act, itself lays down that notwithstanding any custom to the contrary the interest of a grove-holder shall be transferable. Whatever effect the custom may have had it is now nullified by a positive provision of the substantive law. The previous decisions, if any, would under the circumstances be of no avail. It is settled law that every case must be decided on the law that prevails at the time of decision and not according to the law at any other previous time. Any decision in a previous suit on a particular question between particular parties will not operate as res judicata on the same question between the same parties when a different law is in force. This has been recognized in A. I. R. 1932 ALL. 416[1] and in A. I. R. 1925 Cal. 1193.[2]

[6] For these reasons there is no substance in the appeal. It is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Second Appeals Nos. 377, 378 and 379 of 1943, Decided on 9-10-1947, against order of Civil Judge, Bahraich, D/- 24-8-1943.

(a) U. P. Encumbered Estates Act (25 [XXV] of 1934), S. 19 (2) — Special Judge cannot include in list prepared by him for information of collector any property not mentioned in notice under S. 11 even though he has found it to be liable to attachment.

The U. P. Encumbered Estates Act creates a special jurisdiction to be exercised by a special tribunal. When a statute confers jurisdiction upon a tribunal of limited authority and statutory origin, the conditions and qualifications annexed to the grant must be strictly complied with. Thus the Special Judge can exercise only the powers conferred and perform the duties imposed on him by this Act as regards the area and extent of his jurisdiction as pre-cribed by the Provincial Government. The inquiry referred to in sub-section (2) of S. 11, can be made only in relation to property which is mentioned in the notice referred to in that section. Reading S. 19 (2) in the light of Ss. 3 and 11, the Special Judge has no power to include in the list prepared by him for information of the Collector any property which is not mentioned in the notice under S. 11, even though he had on the motion of any of the parties to the proceedings found it to be liable to attachment. If he makes any such inquiry in relation to property not mentioned in S. 11, he exercises a power which is not conferred upon him. In other words, mention of the property in the notice under S. 11, is a condition precedent to the Special Judge acquiring the power to investigate whether such property is liable to attachment, mortgage or sale in satisfaction of the debts of the landlord : 32 A. I. R. 1945 All. 154, Dissent. [Paras 10, 11]

(b) U. P. Encumbered Estates Act (25 [XXV] of 1934), S. 11 (4) — Special Judge finding property not mentioned in notice under S. 11, to be liable to attachment and sale—Order cannot be deemed to be decree of civil Court of competent jurisdiction.

The Special Judge is not an ordinary civil Court which has under S. 9, Civil P. C., jurisdiction to try all suits of a civil nature. The mere fact that a Special Judge has in relation to some property not mentioned in the notice under S. 11, come to a finding that it was liable to attachment, sale or mortgage in satisfaction of the debts of the applicant landlord, would not constitute it a decree of a civil Court of competent jurisdiction. [Para 12]

(c) U. P. Encumbered Estates Act (25 [XXV] of 1934), S. 11 — Person failing to claim property specified in notice referred to in S. 11 — He can maintain suit in ordinary civil Court to establish his title to it.

There is nothing in S. 11 of the Act or in any other provision of this statute which leads to the conclusion that it takes away the jurisdiction of the ordinary civil Courts except in matters which are specifically within the jurisdiction of the Special Judge; nor does it take away the ordinary right of the citizen who is not a party to the proceedings before the Special Judge, except as especially provided therein. It cannot be said that the right of the citizen to seek redress in the ordinary Courts of law and the jurisdiction conferred upon the civil Courts to grant such redress are impliedly taken away by S. 11. If the Legislature intended this to be law it would have said so in clear and unambiguous language and not left it to be inferred from the general scheme of the Act. Hence a person who failed to put forward a claim to property specified in the notice referred to in S. 11, Encumbered Estates Act can maintain a suit to establish his title to it in the ordinary civil Court. The principle of res judicata does not apply to such a case as it is a cardinal rule of the doctrine of res judicata that it is limited to the parties to the proceedings or to parties under whom they or any of them claim : 34 A. I. R. 1947 All. 188, Dissent.

[Paras 14, 18, 20]

(d) U. P. Encumbered Estates Act (25 [XXV] of 1934), S. 47—Scope—Bar under, affects only parties to proceedings before Special Judge or Collector.

Section 47 creates a bar which affects only those who are parties to the proceedings before a Special Judge or Collector or who were under some provision of the Act bound under pain of losing other remedies allowed to them by the ordinary law, to be a party to the proceedings before the Special Judge or Collector.

Judgment.—Second Civil Appeals Nos. 377, 378 and 379 of 1943.—The above three appeals arise out of two suits — Suit No. 93 of 1942 and Suit No. 103 of 1942—instituted in the Court of the Munsif Qaisarganj. Suit No. 93 was brought by Suraj Bakhsh, son of Debi Prasad, for possession of 1. 3 pies 8 karants zamindari share in khata khewat 1/1, and 2. a 9 3/5 pies out of four annas share in mohal Gaya Prasad in village Dahwa Kalan, Parg. Hisampur, Bahraich district. The second Suit No. 103 of 1942 was brought by Mt. Ramraji for possession of one anna eight pies twelve karants zamindari share in the same khata, which was the subject-matter of dispute in Suraj Bakhsh's suit. The same persons were impleaded as defendants in both the suits. The pedigree given below will show the relationship of the defendants to the original owner of the disputed land and the subsequent devolution of property after his death.

HAR PRASAD

- Gaya Prasad
- Ram Ratan
  - Ram Dal, deft. 1
  - Nageshwar, deft. 2
- Sheoratan (died childless.)
  - Avadh Ram, deft. 3
- Gokaran deft. 4
- Kirpa Ram deft. 5

Ganesh Prasad:
- Sitla Din (dead.)
- Durga (dead.)
- Ram Narain (dead.)
- Parmeshwar Din
  - Pargash, deft. 6.
- Sheo Narain.

Har Prasad the common ancestor of all the six defendants against whom the two suits were brought was the owner of village Dahwa Kalan. On his death each of his four sons inherited a four annas share. On death of Ganesh Prasad his four annas devolved upon his five sons, each taking a 9.3/5 pies share. In course of time, three of his sons, Sitla Din, Durga and Ram Narain died and the shares owned by them devolved upon their surviving brothers, Parmeshwar Din and Sheo Narain: Each of them thus became owner of a two annas share. In 1904 Sheo Narain created a mortgage over one anna share in village Dahwa Kalan in favour of Debi Prasad, father of Suraj Bakhsh, plaintiff in Suit No. 93. In 1905 a suit was brought by some members of the family of Har Prasad for cancellation of this mortgage. As a result of this litigation, the mortgage was cancelled but on 18th January 1909, Debi Prasad was granted a personal decree for the amount due against Sheo Narain. In enforcement of this decree Debi Prasad attached the two annas share owned by Sheo Narain. Gaya Prasad and Parmeshwar Din preferred objections against the attachment under O. 21, R. 58, Civil P. C. These objections were allowed. This was followed by a declaratory suit by Debi Prasad under O. 21, R. 62, Civil P. C. The claim was decreed and an appeal preferred against this decision was dismissed on 1st June 1910. The property was put up for sale and the two annas share was purchased by Debi Dayal on 20-1-1919.

[2] Some time after Debi Prasad created a mortgage by conditional sale over one anna eight pies and 12 krants out of the two annas share purchased by him in favour of one Bisheshwar Dayal on 23-4-1932. Bisheshwar Dayal obtained a final decree for foreclosure of the property mortgaged with him. On 13-3-1934, Bisheshwar Dayal transferred his decree to Mt. Ramraji plaintiff in Suit No. 103.

[3] It will thus be seen that out of the two annas share which belonged to Sheo Narain a three pies eight krants share came to be owned by Debi Prasad and one anna eight pies 12 krants share by Mt. Ramraji. It appears that Gaya Prasad was the lambardar of the village. On his death Ram Dal was appointed lambardar.

[4] On 23-11-1933 a decree for profits was obtained by Debi Prasad against Ram Dal. In execution of his decree he attached and put up for sale a 9 3/5 pies share out of the four annas which belonged to Gaya Prasad and on 6-6-1934, purchased it at the court auction. On Debi Prasad's death, the three pies 8 krants share originally owned by him as well as the 9 3/5 pies share which he acquired at sale in execution of his decree for profits devolved upon Suraj Bakhsh.

[5] In 1936 Ram Dal, Nageshwar, Avadh Ram, sons of Ram Ratan, Gokaran, Kirpa Ram sons of Gaya Prasad and Prakash, son of Parmeshwar Din made an application under S. 4, Encumbered Estates Act. In due course this was transmitted to the Special Judge for disposal. A notice as contemplated by S. 11, Encumbered Estates Act was published in gazette and the following items of property were notified as those mentioned by applicants and their creditors in their written statement and the statements of claim under Ss. 8 and 10 of the Act :

"DETAIL OF THE PROPERTY AS SPECIFIED BY THE APPLICANTS"

Serial No.	Village	Mohal	No. of Khata Khewat of share	Haqiyat
1.	Village Dehwa Kalan Parg. Hisampur, Tahsil Qaisarganj, Dist. Bahraich	Dehwa	1/1 share: applicants 1 to 3, 5 annas 4 piees hare; applicants 4 & 5, 5 annas 4 pies share; applicant No. 6, 3 annas 4 pies	Alla
2.	Village Dehwa Kalan, pergana Hisampur, Tahsil Qaisarganj, District Bahraich.	Kuraspara.	1/1 share: applicants 1 to 3, 5 annas 4 pies share; applicants 4 and 5, 6 annas 8 pies share, applicants No. 6, 4 annas.	Proprietary rights."

Four months after the publication of this notice in the gazette on an application made by one of the creditors and a statement made by the learned counsel for the applicants landlords the special Judge transmitted the decrees passed by him under S. 14 of the Act to the Collector and sent along with them a list of the properties which were liable to attachment and sale for satisfaction of the debts of the applicants. This list included the whole of sixteen annas of both the mohals into which village Dahwa Kalan was divided. After the decrees passed under S. 14 were transmitted to the Collector, action was taken under S. 35 of the Act. Suraj Bakhsh and Ramraji were dispossessed of the shares owned by them in Dahwa Kalan and the landlords (debtors) were put in possession. The attempts of Suraj Bakhsh and Ramraji to seek redress in the Courts of the Collector and the Special Judge were unsuccessful. They accordingly instituted the two suits which have given rise to these appeals.

[6] Suraj Bakhsh's claim was decreed in respect of 9 3/5 pies. His claim for three pies eight krants share was dismissed. Ramraji's suit for possession of an one anna eight pies twelve krants share was decreed.

[7] Suraj Bakhsh filed an appeal against that part of the decree which dismissed a portion of his claim. This was appeal No. 52 of 1943, in the lower Court. The defendants Ram Dal and others preferred two appeals Nos. 53 and 54 the first against the decision in Suraj Bakhsh's suit in so far as it related to 9 3/5 pies share and the second against the decision in Ramraji's suit. Ramraji preferred cross-objections as regards her claim for mesne profits which was dismissed. The appeal preferred by Suraj Bakhsh and the cross objections of Ramraji were allowed, while the appeals preferred by the defendants Ram Dal and others were dismissed. Dissatisfied with these decisions, the defendants have preferred these three appeals. Appeal No. 377 relates to Appeal No. 53 of the lower Court which was preferred by the defendants in Suraj Bakhsh's suit. Appeal No. 379 arises out of Appeal No. 52 of 1943 of the lower Court which was preferred by Suraj Bakhsh and was allowed. Appeal No. 378 relates to Appeal No.

54 of 1943 of the lower Court which arose out of the suit brought by Ramraji.

[8] It was contended before us that the suits brought by Suraj Bakhsh and Ramraji were not maintainable in view of the provisions of Ss. 11 and 47, Encumbered Estates Act. We were not asked to hold that the property in dispute belonged to the applicants landlords. It was argued, however, that even though the real owner of the property in dispute be Mt. Ramraji and Suraj Bakhsh in view of the provisions of the sections to which reference has been made, the civil Court was barred from giving them redress. The contention on the face of it is somewhat startling and must be carefully scrutinized. Mr. Siraj Husain relied on the decision of a Bench of the Allahabad High Court in A. I. R. 1947 ALL. 188[1] and contended that after the special Judge had held that certain property was liable to attachment and sale for satisfaction of the debts of the applicant landlord, a person who failed to put forward a claim to such property under S. 11 was debarred from maintaining a suit to establish his title to it in the ordinary civil Courts. The headnote of the case referred to as found in the All India Reporter runs thus:

"It was clearly the intention of the Legislature to secure finality on all questions of title which might be raised in proceedings under the Encumbered Estates Act. A person who failed to put forward a claim to property specified in the notice referred to in S. 11 cannot maintain a suit to establish his title to it in the ordinary civil Courts."

With the greatest respect for the learned Judges responsible for that decision we find ourselves unable to subscribe to the proposition as stated in this bald form.

[9] Reference was also made by the learned counsel to another decision of that Court in 1945 O. W. N. (H.C.) 14.[2] In the last mentioned case the applicant landlord did not mention some property in his written statement under S. 8. A creditor of his (Mauji Ram) mentioned it in his written statement under S. 10. This property was not mentioned in the notice published in the gazette under S. 11 of the Act, but subsequently it was decided on Mauji Ram's motion that the property belonged to the applicant landlord. The landlord appealed against that finding. By the time the appeal was heard, the decrees passed under S. 14 were transmitted by the Special Judge to the Collector under S. 19 and along with this he sent a list which included the property that was omitted by the landlord applicant but was mentioned in the written statement of his claim by Mauji Ram.

[10] It was argued that as this property was not mentioned in the notice issued under S. 11 the Special Judge had no power to specify this property in the information given by him to the Collector. The learned Judges made the following observations as regards this contention:

"We are again unable to accept this argument because in our judgment the sub-section only casts a duty upon the Special Judge to convey some necessary information to the Collector in respect of the properties which the Special Judge holds are liable to be attached and to be seized and sold in satisfaction of the applicant's debts. It does not contain any prohibition that the Special Judge shall not mention any property which is not referred to in the notice under S. 11 even though it is difinitely found upon an issue raised between the parties before him that the property is liable to be seized in satisfaction of the applicants' debts."

Section 19 (2) runs thus:

"The Special Judge shall inform the Collector of the nature and extent of the property mentioned in the notice under S. 11 which he has found to be liable to attachment, sale or mortgage in satisfaction of the debts of the applicant."

Considering the language of this sub-section, we must with the greatest respect observe that the view taken by the learned Judges of the Allahabad High Court is inconsistent with the provisions of S. 19. Under sub-s. (2), it is true a duty is cast upon the Special Judge to convey some information to the Collector. The statute, however, provides what this information shall be. If the language of the section is not to be disregarded the information must relate to the nature and extent of the property mentioned in the notice under S. 11 which has been found by him to be liable to attachment, sale or mortgage in satisfaction of the debts of the applicant. In our opinion if the Special Judge informs the Collector that some property, which was not mentioned in the notice under S. 11 was liable to attachment, sale or mortgage in satisfaction of the debts of the applicant he would be acting in violation of the language of the statute. It is pertinent to remember in this connexion that the Encumbered Estates Act creates a special jurisdiction to be exercised by a special tribunal. It is a well established rule that when a statute confers jurisdiction upon a tribunal of limited authority and statutory origin, the conditions and qualifications annexed to the grant must be strictly complied with (see Craies on Statute Law, page 237).

[11] Under the Encumbered Estates Act, which creates a special jurisdiction and a tribunal of limited authority, the Special Judge is enjoined to publish a notice in the manner specified in S. 9 specifying the property mentioned by the applicant under S. 8 or by any claimant under S. 10. By sub-s. (2) of that section any person having claim to the property mentioned in such notice is required within a period of three months from the date of the publication of the notice in the official gazette to make an application to the Special Judge stating his claim and the Special Judge shall determine whether the property specified in the claim or any part thereof is liable to attachment, sale or mortgage in satisfaction of the debts of the applicant. Under sub-s. (4) any order passed by the Special Judge under this section shall be deemed to be a decree of a civil Court of competent jurisdiction. Enactments which create new jurisdiction must be strictly construed (see Maxwell on the Interpretation of Statutes, 8th Edn., p. 257). Section 3 of the Act reads as follows:

"3. (1) The Provincial Government may appoint any civil judicial officer to be a Special Judge of the first or second grade for any local area and such Special Judge shall subject to the orders of Government as regards the area and extent of his jurisdiction, exercise the powers conferred and perform the duties imposed on him by this Act.

(2) The Provincial Government may suspend or remove any Special Judge so appointed."

It is clear that the Special Judge can exercise only the powers conferred and perform the duties imposed on him by this Act as regards the area and extent of his jurisdiction as prescribed by the Provincial Government. The inquiry referred to in sub-s. (2) of S. 11 can be made only in relation to property which is mentioned in the notice referred to in that section. Reading S. 19 (2) in the light of S. 3 and S. 11, the Special Judge has no power to include in the list prepared by him for information of the Collector any property which is not mentioned in the notice under S. 11, even though he has on the motion of any of the parties to the proceedings found it to be liable to attachment. Indeed as already observed any inquiry made by him in respect of any property, whether it is liable to attachment, mortgage or sale for satisfaction of the debts of the applicant landlord, must be limited to properties which are mentioned in S. 11. If he makes any such inquiry in relation to property not mentioned in S. 11, he exercises a power which is not conferred upon him. In other words, mention of the property in the notice under S. 11 is a condition precedent to the Special Judge acquiring the power to investigate whether such property is liable to attachment, mortgage or sale in satisfaction of the debts of the landlord.

[12] The Special Judge is not an ordinary civil Court which has under S. 9, Civil P. C., jurisdiction to try all suits of a civil nature. The mere fact that a Special Judge has in relation to some property not mentioned in the notice under S. 11 come to a finding that it was liable to attachment, sale or mortgage in satisfaction of the debts of the applicant landlord, would not constitute it a decree of a civil Court of competent jurisdiction.

[13] We do not find any merit in the objection that S. 19 (2) does not contain any prohibition that the Special Judge shall not mention any property which is not referred to in the notice under S. 11, which is the main ground on which the decision in 1945 O. W. N. H. C. 14[2] on this part of the case was based. The section lays down in affirmative words the direction as to the information to be conveyed by the Special Judge to the Collector. The words necessarily imply that the information conveyed must conform to those directions and any information which does not conform with such directions is prohibited. Statutory provisions expressed affirmatively in the form in which they are cast imply a prohibition also and it is not necessary when a section of an Act is cast in such form and the language used is mandatory that it should also express negatively a prohibition that is implied.

"shall inform the Collector of the nature and extent of the property mentioned in the notice under S. 11 which he has found to be liable to attachment, etc.,"

[14] We may now turn to the other case on which reliance was placed by Mr. Siraj Husain: A. I. R. 1947 ALL. 168.[1] The question raised in that case was whether a person who failed to put forward a claim to property specified in the notice referred to in S. 11, Encumbered Estates Act can maintain a suit to establish his title to it in the ordinary civil Court. The question was answered in the negative. It was pointed out that under S. 11 (2) a person having any claim to the property mentioned in the notice was required to make an application to the Special Judge stating his claim. This provision is mandatory. Reference was also made to sub-s. (4) under which any order passed by the Special Judge under that section is to be deemed to be a decree of the civil Court of competent jurisdiction. The learned Judges then proceeded to consider the scheme of the Act and were of opinion that it was clearly designed to secure finality both as regards the claims of creditors and also as regards the claim to the property published as that of the applicant. They noticed that there was an express provision in S. 13 that claims of creditors not made as required by the Act shall be deemed to have been discharged, and the absence of any corresponding provision in the Act that the order passed by the Special Judge under S. 11 was conclusive on the point of title and barred a litigation in other Courts. The learned Judge who pronounced the judgment of the Court (Bennett J.) then proceeded to observe as follows:

"Though the matter may not be covered expressly by S. 11, Civil P. C., the principle of res judicata is, we think, applicable. Section 11, Encumbered Estates Act, requires all claims to the property to be put forward in the proceedings before the Special Judge and the order passed by him under the section is defined as a decree of the civil Court of competent jurisdiction. Thus when no objection is taken on the published notice his order with regard to the property claimed by the applicant under S. 11 must have the same effect."

It is difficult to subscribe to the proposition that the principle of res judicata is applicable to such a case. Apart from any objections that can be raised on the ground of the difference in the jurisdiction exercised by an ordinary civil Court and that vested in a Special Judge appointed under S. 3, Encumbered Estates Act, it is a cardinal rule of the doctrine of res judicata that it is limited to the parties to the proceedings or to parties under whom they or any of them claim. In the case before their Lordships, the Maharaja of Dumraon who instituted a suit in the civil Court to establish his claim to the property was no party to the Encumbered Estates Act proceedings nor was he claiming under any person who was a party to those proceedings. It is in these circumstances difficult to see how the principle of res judicata can be applied. The right or title to property is a civil right. If this is invaded the party aggrieved has a right to have recourse to ordinary civil Courts of the country. Corresponding to this right of the citizen there is vested in Courts the jurisdiction to give redress to aggrieved parties. In our province the Munsif, the Civil Judge and the District Judge are Courts which ordinarily exercise original civil jurisdiction that is they have legal authority to administer justice in cases within their respective jurisdictions. Section 9, Civil P. C. confers upon the Courts the jurisdiction to try all suits of a civil nature excepting suits of which the cognizance is either expressly or impliedly barred. It is clear, therefore, that a person whose civil right is invaded can approach a Munsif or a Civil Judge to establish his claim and the Court is under a duty to give him redress in accordance with the procedure laid down by the law. This jurisdiction of the civil Court must be shown to have been taken away expressly by a statutory provision or by necessary implication before the plea raised by Mr. Siraj Husain can be upheld. Is there anything in the Encumbered Estates Act which takes away the jurisdiction of an owner of immovable property, who is not a party to the proceedings under that Act, to seek redress in the ordinary civil Courts?

[15] The Act, as the preamble says, makes provision for the relief of encumbered estates in the United Provinces. Chapter 1 of the Act consists of two sections, which deal with its short title, extent and commencement and the interpretation clause. Chapter 2 relates to appointment of officers who are to exercise the powers conferred and perform the duties imposed by the Act. Chapter 3 comprises Ss. 4 to 7. Section 4 authorises the making of an application for the benefit of the Act and the time within which it is to be made. Section 5 bars a second application to any other Collector if the landlord has made one under S. 4. Section 6 directs that the Collector shall when an application has been duly made transmit it to the Special Judge for disposal. Section 7 deals with certain consequences of acceptance of an application by the Collector. Under this section all proceedings pending at the date of the Collector's order under S. 6, in any civil or revenue Court in the United Provinces in respect of any debt to which the landlord is subject and all attachments and other execution proceedings issued in respect of such debts are stayed and no fresh suit or proceeding is to be instituted in any civil or revenue Court in respect of any debts incurred by the applicant landlord before the passing of an order under S. 6. When an order under S. 6, is passed, the landlord becomes incompetent to sell or otherwise transfer his property.

[16] Chapter IV deals with proof of debts and procedure of the Special Judge. Section 8 requires the applicant to file a written statement furnishing full particulars relating to all his debts and the nature and the extent of the property owned by his which is liable to attachment and sale under S. 60, Civil P. C. He has also to give the names and addresses of all his creditors. Section 9 enjoins upon the Special Judge the duty to publish a notice calling upon all persons having claims both decreed and undecreed against the landlord to file written statement of their claims within a specified time. Sections 9A, 9B, 9C and 9D, which deal with the management and preservation of the property of the landlord are not relevant for our present purposes. Section 10 lays down what particulars these statements of claims are to contain. Section 11 directs that the Special Judge shall publish a notice specifying the property mentioned by the applicant under S. 8, or by any claimant under S. 10. It further enjoins that any person having any claim to the property mentioned in such notice shall, within a specified period make an application to the Special Judge stating his claim and the Special Judge shall determine whether the property specified in the claim or any part thereof is liable to attachment, sale or mortgage in satisfaction of the debts of the applicant. The Special Judge is further enjoined to determine all claims under S. 11, before he proceeds to determine the amount due to any creditor. He is not to pass any decree under S. 14, until the expiry of a period of one month after the last day on which he determines a claim under this section. Section 12 relates to annulment of transfers by landlords in certain cases.

Section 13 provides that claims not duly notified shall be deemed to be discharged. Section 14 deals with the examination of claims and determination of the amount of debts of the applicant landlord. Section 15 is a saving clause in respect of existing decrees. Section 16 lays down the procedure for ranking of debts for priority. Under S. 17, the amount of public debts reported by the Collector is to be determined. Section 18 lays down the effect of a decree of the Special Judge passed under S. 14. Section 19 directs the Special Judge to transmit to the Collector for execution the decrees passed by him under S. 14 and to inform him of the extent and nature of the property mentioned in the notice under S. 11, which he has found to be liable to satisfy the applicant's debts. Section 20 provides that in certain cases the proceedings started by the applicant under S. 4, may be quashed. Section 20A provides for restoration of certain applications which have been dismissed and certain other matters not relevant for our purposes.

[17] Chapter V deals with the execution of decrees and liquidation of debts. Chapter VI relates to appeals and revision. Section 47, which is the last section in this Chapter provides that except as provided in Ss. 45 and 46 (which deal with appeals and revision), no proceedings of the Collector or Special Judge under the Act shall be questioned in any Court, and Chap. VII deals with other miscellaneous matters not relevant for the present discussion.

[18] There is nothing in S. 11 of the Act or in any other provision of this statute which would lead us to the conclusion that it takes away the jurisdiction of the ordinary civil Courts except in matters which are specifically within the jurisdiction of the Special Judge; nor does it take away the ordinary right of the citizen who is not a party to the proceedings before the Special Judge, except as especially provided therein. For instance, every claim decreed or un-decreed against the landlord in respect of a private debt other than debt due to a co-operative society registered under the Co-operative Societies Act, 1912, by its members, unless made within the time and the manner required by the Act, is under S. 13, deemed for all purposes and on all occasions to have been duly discharged. Similarly under S. 18, subject to the right of appeal or revision conferred in Chap. VI, the effect of a decree of the Special Judge under sub-s. (7) of S. 14, shall be to extinguish the previously existing rights, if any, of the claimant together with all rights, if any of mortgage or lien by which the same are secured and where any decree is given by the Special Judge to substitute for those rights a right to recover the amount of the decree in the manner and to the extent hereinafter prescribed. The effect of S. 13 is to discharge all debts of the landlord which are not duly notified and S. 18 lays down what will be the effect of a decree passed by the Special Judge under S. 14(7). There is no corresponding provision in the Act which says that if a property is mentioned in the notice published under S. 11, and a person who has a claim to that property does not lay his claim before the Special Judge he shall be barred if his rights affected by an order of the Special Judge from seeking redress in the ordinary civil Courts. Can it be said that the right of the citizen to seek redress in the ordinary Courts of law and the jurisdiction conferred upon the civil Courts to grant such redress are impliedly taken away by S. 11? We find no justification for such a view in any of the provisions of the statute. On the other hand the absence of any provision in the statute relating to matters with which S. 11 deals, corresponding to the provisions laid down in Ss. 13 and 18 confirms us in the view that the Act should not be interpreted so as to take away the ordinary right of the citizen or the jurisdiction of the civil Court to determine such right. To take a different view may lead to serious consequences. How is a person to know that his property has not been mentioned by the landlord in his written statement under S. 8 as his or by a creditor of such landlord in his statement under S. 10? That a notice is published in the gazette under S. 11 specifying the properties mentioned in the written statement filed by the landlords of their creditors is no reply to this question. About a hundred courts of Special Judges are working in this province and it is obviously impossible for any person to know if some of his property has not been included in a written statement under S. 8 or S. 10 filed in one of these Courts, in any of the numerous cases pending therein. Were it intended by the Legislature that if a person having a claim to any property mentioned in the notice under S. 11, fails to apply to the Special Judge he loses his right of bringing a suit to establish his title thereto in the ordinary civil Court, we have no doubt that it would have said so in clear terms. There is no such provision in the statute nor is there anything in any of the provisions thereof which in our opinion could legitimately be regarded to imply such an intention on the part of the Legislature.

[19] It is true that a right is given under S. 11, to every person who has a claim to any property which is mentioned in the notice referred to in the section to approach the Special Judge and seek redress. This does not, however, necessarily imply that if he does not do so his ordinary right to seek redress in the civil Court is taken away. It was considered by the Allahabad High Court in the case to which reference has been made above that the provisions of S. 11, indicate that the Legislature intended to secure finally on all questions of title which might be raised in proceedings, under the Encumbered Estates Act. That may be so as regards persons who are parties to those proceedings. But it is a different thing to hold that persons, who are not parties to the proceedings, and who have received no notice except such as may be implied by publication of a notice in the gazette and other newspapers, would lose their title to properties mentioned in the notice if they fail to file a claim under S. 11.

[20] We cannot consider it to be at all likely that if the Legislature intended this to be the law it would not have said so in clear and unambiguous language but left it to be inferred from the general scheme of the Act. We have cursorily examined above the scheme of the Act and find nothing therein to justify such a conclusion. Depriving a citizen of his right to seek redress in the ordinary Courts of law in respect of civil rights is a serious matter, and it would be difficult to find any instance where this is done otherwise than by an express provision of a statute.

[21] Mr. Suraj Husain strongly relied on the provisions of S. 47 of the Act. He contended that in the proceedings of the Special Judge it was held that the property now in dispute in the two suits which have given rise to these appeals was liable to attachment and sale for satisfaction of the debts of the applicants landlords. It was argued that in view of the provisions of S. 47, this could not be questioned in any Court. Under the Evidence Act, judgments, orders or decrees unless they by law prevent any Court from taking cognizance of a suit are irrelevant when the question is whether such a Court ought to take cognizance of such suit (S. 40). Under S. 43 of the same Act, judgments, orders or decrees other than those mentioned in Ss. 40, 41 and 42, are irrelevant, unless the existence of such judgment, order or decree is a fact in issue or is relevant under some other provision of the Evidence Act. We have already shown that the order of Special Judge or to be more accurate the list prepared by him under S. 19 would accordingly be irrelevant unless its existence under any law prevent the civil Court from taking cognizance of the suits which have given rise to these appeals. We have already shown that neither S. 11, Civil P. C., nor the general doctrine of res judicata can legitimately be applied to the case before us. Can it be said that S. 47, Encumbered Estates Act, prevents the civil Court from taking cognizance of these suits? It was not argued, as clearly it could not be, that by virtue of S. 47 every proceeding of the Collector or Special Judge under the Encumbered Estates Act has the force of a judgment in rem. The language used in this section is very wide in its scope and if interpreted literally would have the effect of giving every order of a Special Judge or Collector passed under the Act the effect of a judgment in rem. A literal construction must therefore be ruled out and the section should be construed as subject to some limitation. We have to determine what this limitation should be. The section finds place in the Chapter dealing with appeals and revisions. The statute creates a new jurisdiction of limited character. Provision is made in the Act for remedies against the orders passed by Special Judges and Collectors in Ss. 45 and 46 by way of appeal and revision. Then follows S. 47. It lays down that any proceeding of the Special Judge or Collector under the Act shall, subject to the provisions of Ss. 45 and 46, not be questioned in any Court. But for such a provision it would be open to a party to any proceeding before a Special Judge or a Collector against whom an order was passed under the Encumbered Estates Act to agitate the same matter in any ordinary civil or revenue Court. Section 11, Civil P. C., would not apply to such a case. We are of opinion that S. 47 was enacted to provide against such a contingency and this should enable us to determine the limitation subject to which this section must be read.

[22] "Appeal" is a remedy open only to the parties to the proceedings and not to strangers. Similarly the powers of revision can be exercised only so as to affect the parties to the litigation. It would, having regard to the considerations we have referred to, be only legitimate to hold that S. 47 creates a bar which affects only those who are parties to the proceedings before a Special Judge or Collector, or who were under some provision of the Act bound, under pain of losing other remedies allowed to them by the ordinary law, to be a party to the proceedings before the Special Judge or Collector. We have already given our reasons for the view we take of S. 11 of the Act. The result, therefore, is that on a proper interpretation neither S. 11, nor S. 47 can be a bar to the trial of the suits brought by Ramraji and Suraj Bakhsh.

[23] But apart from these considerations, which are based on an interpretation of Ss. 11 and 47 of the Encumbered Estates Act, we find that the two annas share in Dahwa Kalan of which one anna eight pice twelve krants was owned by Ramraji and three pies eight krants by Suraj Bakhsh, was not mentioned in the notice published under S. 11 in the official gazette. It is clear, therefore, that the inclusion of these two annas share in the list sent by the Special Judge along with the decree transmitted by him under S. 19 cannot affect their title to this property.

[24] It was argued that Suraj Bakhsh had, when he was dispossessed of his property under S. 35 of the Act, preferred an objection before the Collector which was dismissed and that Ramraji not only filed an objection before the Collector which was rejected but further preferred an objection before the Special Judge which she allowed to be dismissed for default. These orders, it was contended, barred the re-trial of the matter in the civil Court. Neither the Collector nor the Special Judge could entertain these objections under any of the provisions of the Encumbered Estates Act, and the orders passed by them throwing out the objections cannot, therefore, be regarded as proceedings under the Act. The Collector was bound by the Special Judge's decision as regards the property which could be leased, mortgaged or sold for satisfaction of the decrees transmitted to him under S. 19 and had no authority to entertain any objections against that decision. No objections were preferred by Suraj Bakhsh before the Special Judge, and Ramraji's objections related to property which was not mentioned in the notice under S. 11 published in the gazette. The Special Judge thus had no legal authority to give any decision on the title to that property. When a statute creates a special tribunal with limited jurisdiction, conferring upon it specified powers and imposing specified duties and also prescribes the conditions with regard to the manner of their exercise, such conditions must be strictly followed. If there is such a violent departure from the procedure laid down by the statute for exercise of powers conferred by it as to take the matter out of what can be legitimately regarded to be within the contemplation of the statute any order thus passed in disregard of the provisions of the Act cannot be held to be a proceeding under the Act. The objection based upon what was done by Suraj Bakhsh or Ramraji after they were dispossessed under S. 35, Encumbered Estates Act, must therefore fail.

[25] With regard to the 9-3/5 pies share claimed by Suraj Bakhsh it was urged that the notice published in the gazette under S. 11 did not specify clearly whether this share was also claimed by any of the landlords applicants to be his property and accordingly the owner could not know whether he should or should not prefer a claim under S. 11. It was contended on behalf of Suraj Bakhsh that in the circumstances of the case it should be deemed that no notice with respect to this property was published and relying on the principle underlying the decision in 34 Cal. 470[3] we were asked to hold that the provisions of the Encumbered Estates Act were not bar to the maintainability of the suit in the civil Court in respect of this property. In view of the interpretation we have placed upon Ss. 11 and 47, Encumbered Estates Act, it is unnecessary to consider this argument though it may be observed that we do not regard it as wholly without substance.

[26] For reasons given above, we are of opinion that the Courts below came to a correct conclusion. All the three appeals fail and are dismissed with costs.

Second Appeal No. 424 of 1942, Decided on 18-11-1947, against order of Civil Judge, Barabanki, D/- 8-8-1942.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 9— Right of worship and right to take out procession—These are inherent civil rights enforceable in law Courts and independent of custom — They can be interfered with only on grounds of controlling of traffic, preventing of disturbances and of nuisance, public or private — Rights are personal and cannot be controlled by representative agreements.

The right of worship is a civil right enforceable in the Court of law and it is an inherent right independent of custom : 2 Mad. 143; 5 Mad. 304 and 18 A.I.R. 1931 All. 674, Rel. on. [Para 6]

The right to take out a procession is also a civil right enforceable in a Court of law. It is also an inherent right independent of custom : 12 A. I. R. 1925 P. C. 36 and 31 A. I. R. 1944 P. C. 33, Rel. on. [Para 8]

The exercise of these rights is however subject to the rights of other members of the public and subject to the powers of the appropriate executive authorities of controlling traffic and preventing disturbances of peace. The rights may be limited by the civil Courts on the ground of nuisance, public or private : 18 A. I. R. 1931 All. 674; 31 A. I. R. 1944 P. C. 33 and 18 A.I.R. 1931 All. 341, Rel. on. [Paras 7, 8]

The custom if any does not abridge the inherent rights of the community in respect of religious processions. If however, parties are bound by a contract inter se, a declaration in breach of such a contract will not be granted by a civil Court. But the right of an individual in this matter is his own personal individual right and is not derived from any other person. Any representative agreement between two communities, in the legal sense, is therefore impossible and such representative agreement between the representatives of the two communities cannot control such rights. Judgment. — This is the defendants' second appeal against the decree, dated 8-8-1942, of Mr. G. S. Misra, Civil Judge, Barabanki, confirming the decree passed by the Munsif of Ramsanehighat.

[2] The plaintiffs, a section of the Hindu community of the town of Zaidpur in Barabanki district, filed a suit in representative capacity against the defendants, a section of the Muslim community also in a representative capacity, for a declaration that in the town of Zaidpur (1) they were entitled to perform worship and recitations in all their temples and abodes of deities with music and dancing without any interference from the Muslims, and (2) they were entitled to take out processions practising their religious observances on the public highway on any occasion they liked without interference from the Muslims. They prayed for a permanent injunction restraining the Muslims of Zaidpur from interfering with them in the exercise of the rights so declared. The plaintiffs alleged that at the instance of the Muslims of the town executive authorities had issued orders from time to time interfering with and restricting their rights in such matters. The defendants denied the claim as put forward and contested the suit on various grounds.

[3] The most important objections which are material in the present appeal are that according to a well-recognized custom the Hindus could take out processions on certain specified occasions only subject to certain restrictions regarding times, routes, destination and the playing of music, and that within their knowledge there was only one temple in Zaidpur where Hindus had been performing worship, that the custom pleaded has been incorporated in two agreements between the representatives of the Hindus and Muslims, viz, Ex. J1 dated 21-8-1911 and Ex. J2 dated 9-4-1935, and that the Hindus could exercise the rights subject to the custom and the agreements mentioned above. In their application the plaintiffs denied the custom and pleaded that the agreements were not binding on them.

[4] The trial Court held that there was no custom of the kind pleaded by the defendants, that the agreements did not bind the plaintiffs, that the plaintiffs were entitled as of right to perform worship and take out processions subject to orders or directions issued by the Magistrate or the police for preventing a breach of the peace or obstruction of thoroughfares, or for other matters mentioned in S. 144, Criminal P. C., or under other statutory provisions or for regulations of traffic, provided that the exercise of the rights does not amount to a nuisance recognized by law. The suit was decreed accordingly. As the plaintiffs had asked for an unqualified declaration of rights they were not awarded their costs, and the parties were directed to bear their own costs. The defendants being dissatisfied went up in appeal and the learned Civil Judge held that the question of custom was really irrelevant, that in fact there was no custom, that the agreements pleaded in the case were not binding on the plaintiffs and accordingly the decree of the trial Court was affirmed and the plaintiffs were deprived of their costs in the appeal in the interest of maintenance of cordial commual relations. The plaintiff's cross-objection in respect of the costs of the trial Court was also dismissed.

[5] In the present appeal by the defendants their learned counsel has only urged that the declaration granted should have been further made subject to the custom and the agreements pleaded in the case. He has, however, frankly conceded that he can cite no authorities for his proposition.

[6] The right of worship is a civil right enforceable in the Court of law and it is an inherent right independent of custom. In 2 Mad. 143[1] and 5 Mad. 304[2] it has been held that the various creeds under the British Crown have got full liberty to celebrate their religious rights and to do worship in accordance with the tenets of their creeds, to build places of worship on private lands, and that except under orders of Magistrates no interference with this liberty can be tolerated. In Select Case No. 77 of Oudh, Queen Empress v. Saiyid Muhammad Uskari, it was stated:

"Yet I cannot concede that any class of the community has a right to oppose such public celebration of worship on the part of others, provided that the latter obey the law of the land and restrict themselves to the limits which the executive officers of Government legally prescribe. Each sect has the right to worship according to its own tenets, provided that it does so under the conditions above stated.

These are the only conditions upon which it would be possible for the British Government to justly administer territories containing millions of men of various creeds and accordingly universal toleration is the settled policy of the Government."

[7] In 53 ALL. 836[3] Mukerji J. observed at p. 858:

"The civil right of every subject of the Crown is that he would be entitled to carry on his worship in any method he likes but so long as he does not by his performances affect others injuriously. In this view, both Hindus and Muhammadans have the right to carry on their worship, the Muhammadans in their mosque and the Hindus in their temple unrestricted each by the other so long as the civil rights of the parties are not encroached upon ..... There can be no doubt that in India there is an absolute freedom of worship for every person living under the protection of the British Crown. A worship of the deity by a single individual or group of individuals according to their own rites can be interfered with only if the act or acts of the aforesaid persons should amount to an infringement of the rights of the public in general, or of the private rights of individuals, which in this case would be of the defendants. In order that the act or acts of worship may be interfered with they must amount either to a public nuisance or to a private nuisance."

In the case mentioned above the reliefs sought were identical in nature to those sought in the present suit and the reliefs granted in the suit were similar to the reliefs so far granted under this suit. The legal position was stated in the second head-note as follows:

"Every person has a right, independent of custom to worship in his own method and according to his own rites; the right however, is not absolute but is limited by the rights of others. The exercise of the right may be limited by order of the public authorities under Ss. 144 or S. 133, Criminal P. C., or S. 30, Police Act, and by the civil Courts on the grounds of nuisance, public or private."

[8] The right to take out a procession is also a civil right enforceable in a Court of law. It is also an inherent right independent of custom. As regards the right to take out a religious procession the legal position has been set at rest by decisions of their Lordships of the Privy Council. In 47 ALL. 151[4] their Lordships of the Privy Council, while dealing with the right of Shias to perform matam in front of a mosque of Sunnis, held that:

In India there is a right to conduct a religious procession with its appropriate observances through a public street so that it does not interfere with the ordinary use of the street by the public, and subject to lawful directions by the Magistrates. A civil suit for a declaration lies against those who interfere with a religious procession or its appropriate observances."

This principle has been re-affirmed in A. I. R. 1944 P. C. 33.[5] In that case certain Shia Muslims of Amroha in Moradabad district wanted to take out "tazias" of a particular height exceeding that of the electric wires of the local Electric Supply Company. In 1930 they filed a suit to restrain the Electric Supply Company from permitting the wires to interfere with the free passage of the "tazias." Here it was claimed by the Shias that by an old custom they had a right to take out "tazias" to the height of 27 feet. They also alleged a compromise with the Electric Supply Company in the previous years. In the course of their judgment their Lordships while agreeing with the High Court that it is unnecessary to consider the question of custom observed:

"They agree that it is unnecessary to consider the question of custom. The plaintiffs have the right as members of the public to take part in religious processions in the street: subject of course to the rights of other members of the public to pass and repass along the same streets and subject to the powers of the appropriate authorities of controlling traffic and preventing disturbance. This right as a normal user of the highway does not originate in custom. Whether a highway could be dedicated subject to such a custom need not be considered. It is not alleged in the present case and it is difficult to see how such a situation could arise. The rights of the plaintiffs therefore are no more and no less than the rights of any member of the public and subject to questions of danger or disorder there seems no reason why a member of the public should not convey along an open street as part of a normal use of the street articles of any height. But as the plaintiffs' rights are those of the public, so where public rights may lawfully be abridged, so may the plaintiff's."

It is clear from the decision of their Lordships that custom does not affect the rights in regard to religious processions. Their Lordships do not say anything specifically about the effect of the compromise as apparently no right was claimed on its basis.

[9] In 53 ALL. 484[6] where disputes arose between Hindus and Muslims in respect of religious processions and Muslims sought to restrict the rights of Hindus on the basis of both custom and compromise the law was most ably summarized—if I may say so with all respect to the learned Judges—and it was stated:

"There is a right in every community to take out a religious procession, with its appropriate observances, along a high way. This is an inherent right and does not depend on the proof of any custom or long established practice. Even if such a procession be an innovation, it would be in the exercise of legal rights. The right is independent of any long standing tradition and is not lost by mere abstention or non-exercise of it for a number of years. Any inquiry as to the existence or non-existence of an old custom is therefore unnecessary and irrelevant..... Every man is entitled to enjoy his own civil right provided in doing so he does not infringe the legal rights of another..... If the parties are bound by a contract inter se a declaration in breach of such contract will not be granted by a civil Court."

It is clear that the custom if any does not abridge the inherent rights of the community in respect of religious processions, and further if parties are bound by a contract inter se, a declaration in breach of such a contract will not be granted by a Civil Court. In the present case both the Courts below have found it as a fact that the agreements of compromise, Ex. J1 and J2, cannot possibly be considered to have been executed on behalf of every member of the particular community and as such they have no binding effect. The reason for such a finding is that the representatives cannot possibly represent all the persons of the community which must include many minors and without proof of valid authority, express or implied, it would not be possible to bind the other members of the community who are not parties to the written compromises or could not validly give consent. Further the right of an individual in this matter is his own personal individual right and is not derived from any other person. Any representative agreement in the legal sense is therefore impossible in view of the nature of the right the exercise of which is sought to be controlled by the agreement.

[10] It is thus clear that the rights claimed by the Hindus in this case are not capable of being governed either by any custom or by any compromise. The decisions of the Courts below were obviously right and cannot be interfered with. The appeal accordingly fails and is hereby dismissed with costs of this Court.

[11] As regards the costs of the trial Court and the lower appellate Court, the respondents have filed a crose-objection claiming costs of both the Courts. Costs are always in the discretion of the Court and so long as this discretion is exercised reasonably no appellate Court will interfere. The trial Court refused the costs on the ground that the plaintiffs had claimed an unqualified declaration of their rights. The lower appellate Court thought this a reasonable ground and so dismissed the cross-objection regarding the costs. I agree with the lower appellate Court on this point and there is no reason to interfere. The lower appellate Court refused the costs of the appeal before it in the interest of maintenance of cordial communal relations. This also is a reasonable ground, and I see no reason to interfere. In the result the cross-objection is dismissed, but I direct that the parties shall bear their own costs of the cross-objection.

Municipal Board, Lucknow—Defendant—Appellant v. Aziz Hussain — Plaintiff — Respondent.

Second Appeal Nos. 388 and 389 of 1943; 253 and 254 of 1944 and 407 and 452 of 1945, Decided on 29-7-1947, against order of Dist. Judge, Lucknow, D/- 13-8-1943.

(a) U. P. Municipalities Act (2 [II] of 1916), S. 71 —Power under, cannot be delegated by Board to Retrenchment Committee.

The Municipal Board cannot delegate its power under S. 71 to the Retrenchment Select Committee. Hence resolutions delegating such power and action taken in pursuance of such delegation are of no legal effect. [Para 22]

(b) U. P. Municipalities Act (2 [II] of 1916), Ss. 74, 326 — Retrenchment Committee abolishing certain post — No confirmation by Board—Chairman dismissing incumbent—Appeal to Government — Order of Chairman held invalid—Suit to recover provident fund during pendency of appeal decreed — Subsequent resolution by Board confirming decision of Committee and action of Chairman—No fresh order of dismissal — Suit by employee for declaration that he was still in employment and for arrears of pay—Plaintiff held entitled to declaration — He was held not estopped by previous suit — S. 326 held applied — Allowances not mentioned in notice under S. 326 held could not be allowed — Evidence Act (1872), S. 115.

A Retrenchment Committee of a Municipal Board abolished certain post. The incumbent of the post was dismissed by the Chairman of the Board under S. 74. The decision of the Retrenchment Committee was not confirmed by the Board. On appeal by the employee to Government the order was held to be invalid and it directed that the Board should adopt a resolution retrenching the post and the chairman should then pass formal order under S. 74 dismissing the incumbent of the post. During the pendency of the appeal the employee sued to recover his provident fund on the ground of his dismissal and got a decree. The Board then passed a resolution confirming the decision of the Retrenchment Committee and the action of the Chairman. No fresh order of dismissal was thereafter passed by the Chairman. The employee brought a suit for declaration that he was still in service and for recovery of arrears of pay :

Held (1) that the order of the Chairman was ultra vires and the subsequent resolution of the Board had no effect. The plaintiff was therefore entitled to the declaration : 32 A. I. R. 1945 F. C. 47, Disting.; 30 A. I. R. 1943 Oudh 368, Rel. on. [Paras 28, 29, 30]

(2) that the plaintiff was not estopped by reason of his suit for provident fund as it was filed before the decision of the appeal to Government ; [Para 32]

(3) that S. 326 applied and the plaintiff could recover only six months' salary : 19 A. I. R. 1932 Oudh 193 (F. B.), Foll ; Case law reviewed. [Para 52]

(4) that claim to allowances and increased pay not mentioned in notice under S. 326 could not be allowed. [Para 54]

Annotation : ('46-Man.) Evi. Act, S. 115, N. 4.

(c) U. P. Municipalities Act (2 [II] of 1916), S. 326 — Scope and applicability — Section covers illegal omissions also — Omission by Board to pay employee's salary—S. 326 applies in such case.

It is true that S. 326 applies only to cases in respect of "an act done or purporting to have been done" by the Board. But S. 4 (2), U. P. General Clauses Act, provides that "words which refer to acts done extend also to illegal omissions." Thus the omission of the Board to pay its employee's salary would be an act by the Board to which the provisions of S. 326 would be applicable if the other conditions of the section are satisfied. Prima facie the words used in S. 326 (1) are wide enough to cover all cases against the Board of every description : 19 A. I. R. 1932 Oudh 193 (F. B.), Foll.; Case law reviewed. [Paras 34, 35, 36]

Judgment. — These six appeals arise out of three suits instituted by Aziz Hussain against the Lucknow Municipal Board (to which we will hereafter refer as the board) in respect of his dismissal from the service of the board. The appeal first came up for hearing before a learned Single Judge of this Court who, by reason of the importance of the questions of law which arise, has referred them to a Bench for decision.

[2] The facts which are admitted and which are common to the three cases are as follows: On 6-8-1936, the plaintiff entered into the service of the board as a Chief Tap Inspector on a salary of Rs. 80-4-90. In 1940 it became necessary for the board to retrench its expenditure. By resolution No. 355, dated 12-7-1940, it appointed a Retrenchment Committee. A suggestion was made by the Superintendent of Water Works that a saving of Rs. 5000 per year could be effected in his department and this proposal was forwarded by the board to the Retrenchment Committee which was authorised to decide the matter of reducing the staff without further reference to the board. For the purposes of carrying out this work, the Chairman of the Water Works Committee was also to be a member of the Retrenchment Committee — vide Resolution No. 539 and 540 dated 19-8-1940 (Ex. 10 & 11/P. W. 2 of Suit No. 60 of 1942).

[3] On 6-12-1940, the Retrenchment Committee resolved that certain specified posts in the Water Works Department, including the posts of two Chief Tap Inspectors, should be abolished and it directed the Superintendent of the Water Works to suggest the names of the persons who were to be removed from the service as a result of the abolition of the posts. On 17-12-1940, the Superintendent submitted the list which included the name of the plaintiff also, and on the same date the Chairman directed that notices should be issued to all the persons entered in the list that their services would not be required after 1-1-1941 (vide Ex. A-6 of Suit No. 60 of 1942).

[4] Notices were issued by the Superintendent accordingly. The notice to the plaintiff is Ex. 7 of the Suit No. 60. This notice was served on the plaintiff on 23-12-1940. On the same date 19 members of the board (i.e. a majority of the members) made a request in writing to the Chairman to place the resolution of the Retrenchment Committee for a reduction of the staff before the board for reconsideration. (This matter remained pending till 20-3-1942, when the papers were filed without any further action: vide Ex. A7 of Suit No. 224/165 of 1943.)

[5] The plaintiff (and the other Tap Inspector dismissed with him) appealed to the Provincial Government in exercise of the right given to them by S. 74, U. P. Municipalities Act (Ex. 9/P. W. 2 of Suit No. 60). They contended that the order for their removal was illegal and they prayed for their re-instatement, or, if the order was found to be legal, for the pay and allowances to which, they alleged, they would, in that event, be entitled. This appeal remained pending for a considerable time and, on 13-8-1942 the Provincial Government decided by G. O. No. 2756/11-30-41 (Ex. 3 of Suit No. 60), that the abolition of the two posts was justified and necessary but that the procedure adopted was illegal, since it was only the board itself that could abolish posts and that this authority could not be delegated. It further held that the Chairman could only order dismissal after the posts had been abolished. As a result it ordered to the board to proceed "now" to adopt a resolution retrenching the two posts and directed further that the Chairman should then pass an order dismissing the appellants unless they had already been absorbed in some other posts. It then directed that the appellants should get three months' salary in lieu of notice and should also get leave to which they were entitled. The effect of this order has been discussed at considerable length by the learned counsel for the board and its meaning and effect has a very important bearing upon the decision of all the appeals.

[6] About six months after the receipt of this Government Order, on 15-2-1943, the board passed two resolutions by one of which it confirmed the proposals of Retrenchment Committee abolishing the two posts of Chief Tap Inspectors (as well as a large number of other posts) from 1-1-1941, and also confirming the order passed by the Chairman on 17-12-1940, dismissing the plaintiff and others (vide EX. A-3 of Suit NO. 224/165 of 1943).

[7] Some money had accumulated to the credit of the plaintiff in the Provident Fund and he desired to get this back. When the board did not give it to him he gave a notice to the board on 8-5-1941, through his counsel alleging his dismissal from service as from 1-1-1941, and, in consequence, his right to get payment of the Provident Fund (EX A-1 of Suit NO. 60). On the failure of the board to pay the money the plaintiff instituted a suit which was decreed by the Munsif South Lucknow, on 20-1-1942 (EX. A-2 of Suit NO. 60).

[8] Thereafter, on 6-5-1942, the plaintiff gave a notice under S. 326 (1), Municipalities Act, to the board of his intention to file a suit for arrears of his salary on the ground that his dismissal was illegal and ultra vires, and he demanded payment of all arrears of salary due up to the date of his notice. He also expressed his intention of suing for damages. The board replied to this notice but refused to accede to the contentions of the plaintiff. Consequently, on 26-9 1942, the plaintiff instituted Suit NO. 60 of 1942 against the board in the Court of the civil Judge, Lucknow. In this suit he alleged that his dismissal was illegal and invalid and that he was entitled to Rs. 1920, as salary for 20 months from 1-1-1941 to 31-8-1942, at the rate of Rs. 96 per month. He further pleaded that he was entitled to Rs. 100 as damages for mental and bodily worry and loss of health and honour owing to his invalid removal from service. At a later stage he added a prayer for a declaration that resolutions 539 and 540 of the board, dated 19-9-1940 were illegal and ultra vires. In the alternative he pleaded that, if his dismissal was lawful, he was entitled to three months salary in lieu of notice and the salary for six months 12 days due to him as leave. He alleged that the cause of action accrued to him on 19-1-1941, and thereafter on the 1st day of each month.

[9] In its written statement the Board denied that the dismissal was invalid or ultra vires and contended that the plaint was not in accordance with the terms of the notice, that the suit was barred by time, that the plaintiff had already obtained refund of his Provinent Fund on the basis of his dismissal and he could not consequently plead continuation of his service and that, in any case, the plaintiff was not entitled to more than three months salary. In an additional written statement it was pleaded that the relief for declaration had not been mentioned in the notice and could, consequently not be claimed and further that it was barred by time.

[10] The learned civil Judge framed the following five issues:

1. (a) Whether the Select Committee for retrenchment appointed by the Municipal Board had no authority to dispense with the plaintiff's services?

(b) Whether the order dispensing with plaintiff's services was illegal on account of any other reason? If so, what is its effect.

2. Whether the claim of the plaintiff is time-barred?

3. Whether, in view of the decree, dated 10-1-1942, the plaintiff cannot plead continuation of service?

4. Whether the claim of the plaintiff is not in accordance with the terms of the notice, dated 6-5-1942? If so, what is its effect?

5. To what relief and damages, if any, is the plaintiff entitled?

[11] Upon these issues the learned civil Judge found:

(1) That although the Select Committee was indirectly responsible for the removal of the plaintiff, he was in fact removed under the orders of the Chairman.

(2) That the Chairman had no authority to remove the plaintiff until the Board had abolished the post which he held.

(3) That the functions of the Board under S. 71, Municipalities Act could not be delegated and consequently the resolution of the Select Committee could not operate to abolish the plaintiff's post. It was illegal and ultra vires.

(4) Section 68, Municipalities Act does not apply to the case.

(5) That the order for the abolition of the plaintiff's post being illegal, it did not bring about the discharge of the plaintiff.

(6) That, in law, the plaintiff, not having been removed from service, had a recurring cause of action at the expiry of each month.

(7) That the order of the Board having merged in the order of the Government and the suit having been brought within six months of that order it is within time.

(8) That the plaintiff is not estopped from challenging the validity of his removal by reason of his action in obtaining a decree for his provident fund money.

(9) That the claim for declaratory relief is covered by the notice under S. 326.

(10) That it is unncessary to grant the declaration since the plaintiff does not press for it and it makes no difference whether the declaration is granted or not.

(11) That the plaintiff is not entitled to any damages.

(12) That if the removal of the plaintiff has been held to be valid he would have been entitled to three months' salary in lieu of notice and four months' salary on account of privilege leave but this situtation does not arise.

The suit was accordingly decreed for recovery of Rs. 1920, arrears of salary.

[12] From this decision both the parties appealed and by his judgment, dated 13-8 1943, the District Judge of Lucknow, dismissed the Board's appeal and allowed the plaintiff's appeal granting him the declaratory relief claimed also. Appeals NOS. 388 and 389 of 1943 have been filed by the Board against the two decrees of the District Judge, the first being against the decree dismissing its appeal and the second against the decree allowing the plaintiff's appeal.

[13] On 21-7-1943, Aziz Husain instituted another Suit Nos. 234 and 165 of 1943 in the Court of the Munsif South, Lucknow, claiming ten months' pay for the period from 1-9-1942 to 30-6-1943, amounting to Rs. 960 together with Rs. 50 interest on the same grounds as in the previous suit. No declaration of damages were asked for in this suit. The Superintending Engineer, Public Health Department, U. P., was also impleaded as a party since the Government had taken the Water Works under its own management and entrusted it to the Superintending Engineer. In this case also the Board took the same pleas and further pleaded that since the plaintiff had appealed to the Government under S. 74, Municipalities Act, and as the Board had complied with the orders of the Government, no civil suit was maintainable. The learned Munsif framed 12 issuses of which only the following are now material:

(2) Whether the suit is barred by limitation under S. 326 of Act 2 [II] of 1916?

(3) Whether the suit is not maintainable for want of valid notice under S. 326 of Act 2 [II] of 1916?

(4) Whether the plaintiff's suit is barred by estoppel?

(5) Whether the plaintiff has been illegally dismissed from his service? If so, what is its effect?

(10) Whether the plaintiff's suit is not maintainable as alleged in para. 21 of the written statement of defendant 1.

[14] Upon these issues the learned Munsif found:

(1) That the plaintiff's dismissal was illegal and the resolution of the Board, dated 15-2-1943, does not have the effect of legalising it.

(2) That the plaintiff is, therefore, entitled to his salary even for the period subsequent to his removal from service.

(3) That S. 326 (3), Municipalities Act does not apply but Art. 102 of Sch. 1, Limitation Act applied and that suit for each month's salary is within time if it is brought within 3 years.

(4) That the notice given by the plaintiff to the Municipal Board was valid.

(5) That the filing of the suit for, and recovery of, the Provident Fund Money does not estop the plaintiff.

(6) That there is no bar to the institution of the suit by reason of the filing of the appeal to the Provincial Government.

[15-16] Upon these findings, since notice had only been given with regard to seven months' salary, the suit was decreed for Rs. 672. From this decree also both parties appealed and the civil Judge, Malihabad, Lucknow, allowed the appeal of Aziz Husain. He held:

(1) That resolution Nos. 539 and 540 of 19-9-1940, passed by the Board delegating the power of decreasing the number of its servants was not proper.

(2) That the dismissal of the plaintiff by the Chairman was not illegal because the power conferred by S. 74 on the Chairman is independent of S. 71.

(3) That the Government order of 13-8-1942 did not cancel the Chairman's order and did not re-instate the plaintiff.

(4) That the dismissal of the plaintiff was not void and ultra vires.

(5) That since the suit was commenced more than six months after the order passed by the Government in appeal under S. 74, Municipalities Act, and it virtually refused to re-instate the plaintiff, the suit is barred under S. 326 (3) of the Act.

(6) That the plaintiff cannot sue for salary unless he shows that he was always ready to discharge the duties entrusted to him.

[17] From the decrees in the two appeals Aziz Husain has appealed, Appeal No. 253 of 1944 is directed against the decree dismissing his appeal and Appeal No. 254 of 1944 is directed against the decree allowing the Board's appeal.

[18] On 24-2-1944, a third Suit No. 36 of 1944 was filed by Aziz Husain in the Court of the Munsif South, Lucknow (it was subsequently transferred to and decided by the Additional Munsif) against the Board. In this suit he claimed Rs. 700 as salary at the rate of Rs. 100 for seven months from 1-7-1943 to 31-1-1944. He also claimed Rs. 23 as interest and Rs. 280 as motor cycle allowance for seven months. The grounds of his right to the relief prayed for were the same as in the previous suits. The defence was also the same as in Suit No. 224/165 of 1943, except that it was pleaded that the Superintending Engineer, Public Health Department should also be made a party. The material issues in this suit were practically the same as those in Suit No. 224/165 of 1943 and the learned Munsif came to the same conclusion as the Munsif South in that case. He did not hold the plaintiff entitled to any motor cycle allowance or interest but he held him entitled to salary at the rate of 96 per month and dearness allowance from 1-9-1943. A decree for Rs. 726 was, therefore, passed. Again both parties appealed and the civil Judge, Lucknow, dismissed both the appeals upholding all the findings of the Munsif. Both the parties have come up in appeal to this Court. Appeal No. 407 of 1945 has been filed by Aziz Husain while Appeal No. 452 of 1945 has been filed by the Board.

[19] The first point which the learned counsel for the Board has placed before us is that of limitation. In two cases in which this point has been decided against him the Courts have proceeded on two grounds, namely: (1) That since the plaintiff's service continues, he has a recurring cause of action, and (2) that, in any case, the suit has been brought within six months of the Government's order, which is the final order in the matter.

[20] It may be noticed that the Court which has decided the point of limitation in his favour has also held that the order of the Government gives a fresh starting point of limitation.

[21] The learned counsel contends that neither of these grounds is a valid ground. He points out that he pleads the bar of limitation under a special law, namely S. 326 (3), U. P. Municipalities Act. Consequently he contends, by reason of S. 29 (2) (b), Limitation Act, S. 23 of that Act, which deals with cases of continuing wrong, is not applicable. He, therefore, urges that the suits were within time only in respect of salary for six months at the most in each case. With regard to the suit for declaration he contends that the Government order does not give a fresh starting point for a suit. The determination of the question of limitation depends upon the questions whether the plaintiff can still be deemed to be in the service of the Board or whether he has, in fact, been dismissed, though, perhaps, his dismissal is wrongful, and what is the effect of Government order of 13-8-1942. We, therefore, proceed to decide these questions—which are in reality the questions involved on the merits of the appeal—first.

[22] It is no longer disputed in these appeals that the Board could not delegate its powers under S. 71, Municipalities Act, to the Retrenchment Select Committee. Consequently resolutions NOS. 539 and 540 of 19-9-1940—the resolutions complained of—are of no legal effect and neither they, nor anything done in pursuance of them—operate to cause the termination of the plaintiff's service. The learned counsel for the Board, however, contends that, even if there is no retrenchment or abolition of the post held by the plaintiff the Chairman could nevertheless, in exercise of the powers conferred upon him by S. 74, U. P. Municipalities Act, have lawfully dismissed or removed the plaintiff from service. The argument proceeds that the Chairman did exercise his powers and remove the plaintiff by his order, dated 17-12-1940. That, it is argued, the plaintiff ceased to be in the service of the Board and is not entitled to any of the reliefs for which he prays.

[23] A further argument addressed to us in this connection was that, whatever irregularity might have attached to the order of the Chairman, it was nevertheless an order which he was competent to pass and, consequently, the only remedy open to the person aggrieved by that order was to resort to the remedy provided by S. 74 of the Act and to appeal to the Provincial Government. It is urged that if this view be correct the civil Courts would have no jurisdiction to entertain the suit for a declaration.

[24] Lastly it was contended that, should the civil Courts be considered to have jurisdiction in the matter, nevertheless the frame of the suit is bad and the suit should have been one for wrongful dismissal and not for a declaration that the plaintiff is still in the employment of the Board.

[25] In the view which we take of the case we are not called upon to decide either the first or the second of the points raised by the learned counsel for the Board, because his appeal cannot succeed even if his arguments on these points are accepted. The record discloses the fact that the plaintiff and another official removed by the same order did appeal to the Provincial Government, and the Government set aside the Chairman's orders. The Board's learned counsel contends that, reading the petition of appeal and the order of the Government together, it must be held that the appeal was rejected and that, consequently, the order of the Chairman, dated 17-12-1940, stood. We are unable to accept this contention.

[26] One of the prayers contained in the petition of appeal (EX. 9/P. W. 2 of Suit No. 60) was that the Government should order that the petitioners be re-instated. It is true that the order of the Government (EX. 3 of Suit NO. 60) does not expressly grant this prayer. This was, however, not because the prayer was rejected but because, on the view of the law taken by the Provincial Government, no question of reinstatement arose.

[27] The order first of all states that the abolition of two posts of Chief Inspectors was a genuine piece of retrenchment and was necessary. It then proceeds to state that the Board could not delegate its powers of abolishing the posts and that consequently the resolution of the Select Committee, without its subsequent confirmation by the Board (which had not till then taken place)

"could not bring about the abolition of these posts, or the discharge of their incumbents. The order about the latter should have been passed by the Chairman of the Municipal Board under S. 74 of the Act, when the Municipal Board had resolved to abolish the posts."

After having expressed its view as to the invalidity of the action of the Chairman, the Government proceeded to lay down the procedure which should be adopted in future in the following words:

"3. The Board should now adopt a formal resolution under S. 71 of the Act, retrenching the two posts as suggested by the Select Committee appointed by it. The Chairman should then, if the Board has not been able to absorb the appellants in any other posts in its service since, pass formal orders discharging them from service."

The order then proceeds to deal with other points raised in the petition of appeal with which we are not concerned.

[28] There can be no doubt that in the view taken by the Government—whether that view is right or wrong is immaterial—the Chairman could not exercise his powers under S. 74, Municipalities Act, in respect of the petitioners until the Board had abolished the posts held by them. In that view the order of the Chairman was ultra vires and of no effect. Thus the petitioners were —in the opinion of the Government—still in the service of the Board and no question of reinstatement arose. This is made still further clear by the direction given to the Board that it should "now" proceed to abolish the posts and thereafter the Chairman should "pass formal orders discharging them from service." If the petitioners were to be treated as having already ceased to be employees of the Board there was no need for further orders by the Chairman discharging them from service. Thus, for reasons which may be right or wrong, the Government did in fact set aside the order of the Chairman, dated 17th December 1942, though it at the same time held that there was real need for retrenchment in the manner proposed by the Select Committee. In this view of the matter, there is no order of the Chairman in existence and no question as to whether he had authority to pass it without the abolition of the post by the Board under S. 71, Municipalities Act, arises. Nor can it be argued that the plaintiff could not seek a remedy in the civil Courts which would have the effect of setting aside an order of the Chairman because that order has already been set aside by the authority competent to set it aside, namely, the Provincial Government.

[29] The learned counsel for the Board next contended that, after the Government's order had been received by it, the Board did in fact pass orders retrenching some posts, including the post held by the appellant and also confirming the orders of the Chairman removing the plaintiff and others from the service of the Board from 1st January 1941. It was urged that, by reason of the resolutions, the service of the plaintiff terminated. It is true that on 15th February 1943, the Board passed the two resolutions mentioned but, while the Board had authority, to abolish posts, it had no authority to dismiss any particular employee: that was the right of the Chairman under S. 74, U. P. Municipalities Act, and it is agreed that the Chairman passed no order after the receipt of the Government's orders. Merely by framing its resolution in the form of confirming an action of the Chairman the Board cannot usurp to itself the powers of the Chairman, nor can it revive the order of the Chairman which had been held invalid, and consequently of no effect, by the Government in an appeal under S. 74. Further the abolition of the posts did not automatically terminate the services of the holders of the posts: the one was within the power of the Board and the other within the powers of the Chairman. Moreover, we find, on reference to the resolution of the Board, that it covered the cases of a large number of posts to be retrenched out of a much larger number of posts of the same kind. It would be for the Chairman to consider which individual holders of the posts should be removed and it was open to him not to remove the holder of any post from the service of the Board because, though he could not continue him in the post which had been abolished, he could give him some other alternative employment in the service of the Board. Thus, on the first two points, it must be held that there is no valid order dismissing the plaintiff from service in existence and he must be deemed to be still in service.

[30] On these findings the last argument under this head also does not arise because when there has been no dismissal at all there can be no suit for damages for wrongful dismissal. The learned counsel for the Board relied upon the case in A. I. R. 1945 F. C. 47,[1] decided by the Federal Court but the principle of that case is wholly inapplicable to the facts of the present case since in that case the person dismissing the servant had power to dismiss him and his action was not ultra vires nor had his order been set aside. Thus there was a valid order dismissing the servant in existence but there were defects in the procedure adopted by the officer giving the order. The result was that there had been a dismissal but it was wrongful. In the present case the order of the officer authorised to dismiss has been set aside by the authority competent to set it aside: it, therefore, no longer exists. The subsequent order passed by the Board is ultra vires because the Board had no power to dismiss or remove the plaintiff. Thus in the present case the service of the plaintiff has not been legally terminated and he is entitled to maintain the suit for a declaration that he is in the service of the Board. This view finds full support from 1943 O. W. N. 118,[2] in which also the order for dismissal was passed by a person not competent to pass it and was consequently declared null and void and it was also declared that the plaintiff was still in service.

[31] Another plea taken by the learned counsel for the Board in this connection was one of estoppel and it is said to have arisen in the following manner. Before instituting the suits out of which the present appeals arise the plaintiff on 8th May 1941, gave to the board a notice demanding the amount standing to his credit in the Provident fund. The Board did not pay this money. The plaintiff, therefore, commenced a suit against the Board for payment of the money and on 10th January 1942, he obtained a decree which he executed. It is contended that, since he obtained this money on the representation that he had been dismissed from the service of the Board, he is now estopped from contending that he is still in the service of the Board. We are unable to accede to this contention.

[32] It will be seen that, when the suit for the Provident Fund was instituted, the order of the Chairman removing the plaintiff from service still stood. He did not know what the result of his appeal to the Government would be. If the order had been allowed to stand the cause of action for his suit for the Provident Fund money would arise from the date of his dismissal and the claim might, by the time that Government orders were received, be barred by time. At the time when he alleged that he had been dismissed in fact an order for his dismissal did exist. It was only on 13th August 1942, that it was cancelled. In these circumstances if the plaintiff alleged, in the suit for recovery of the money in the Provident Fund, that he had been dismissed he was not making any misrepresentation as a result of which the Board was induced to alter its position. Thus no estoppel arises.

[33] In the view which we have taken no question of limitation arises with regard to the relief for a declaration that the plaintiff is still in the service of the Board, but the position with regard to the claim for the arrears of salary is different. That claim is based upon the omission of the Board to pay this salary at the end of each month as it fell due and, as the plaintiff itself states, the cause of action arose on the first day of each succeeding month. The learned counsel for the Board relies upon the provisions of S. 326, U. P. Municipalities Act, for the proposition that the claim to salary for a period more than six months before the date of the filing of each suit is barred by time. Section 326 is as follows:

"326 (1) No suit shall be instituted against a board or against a member, officer or servant of a board, in respect of an act done or purporting to have been done in its or his official capacity, until the expiration of two months next after notice in writing has been in the case of a board, left at its office, and, in the case of a member, officer or servant, delivered to him, or left at his office or place of abode, explicitly stating the cause of action, the nature of the relief sought, the amount of compensation claimed, and the name and place of abode of the intending plaintiff, and the plaint shall contain a statement that such notice has been so delivered or left.

(2) If the board, member, officer or servant shall, before action is commenced, have tendered sufficient amends to the plaintiff, the plaintiff shall not recover any sum in excess of the amount so tendered and shall also pay all costs incurred by the defendant after such tender.

(3) No action such as is described in sub-s. (1) shall, unless it is an action for the recovery of immovable property or for a declaration of title thereto, be commenced otherwise than within six months next after the accrual of the cause of action.

(4) Provided that nothing in sub-s. (1) shall be construed to apply to a suit wherein the only relief claimed is an injunction of which the object would be defeated by the giving of the notice or the postponement of the commencement of the suit or proceedings."

[34] It is true that S. 326 applies only to cases in respect of "an act done or purporting to have been done" by the Board and in the present case the cause of action is an omission of the Board to do something, namely, to pay the salary legally due to the plaintiff; but S. 4 (2), U. P. General Clauses Act, provides that "words which refer to acts done extend also to illegal omissions." Accordingly in A. I. R. 1933 ALL. 785,[3] at p. 786 it was held that the withholding of payment amounts to an act done by the Board. The same view was taken by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in 61 I. A. 171,[4] at p. 175, in construing the same words in S. 80, Civil P. C. Their Lordships referred to the definitions contained in S. 3, General Clauses Act, which is the same as the definition contained in S. 4 (2), U. P. General Clauses Act.

[35] Thus the omission of the Board to pay the plaintiff's salary would be an act by the Board to which the provisions of S. 326 would be applicable if the other conditions of the section are satisfied.

[36] Prima facie, the words used in S. 326 (1) are wide enough to cover all cases against the Board of every description. In 23 A. L. J. 23,[5] the case was very similar to the present one and S. 326 was held to bar a claim for arrears of pay by an ex-employee of the Municipal Board which had been brought more than six months after it accrued due. Similarly in 21 A. L. J. 161,[6] a claim by a contractor for payment of Rs. 350 which had been struck out from his bill was held to be barred by reason of the 6 months rule laid down in S. 326. In these two cases, however, there is no discussion since it seems to have been agreed that S. 326 was applicable.

[37] In Oudh also the same view prevailed. In 1 Luck. 444,[7] the point was taken that S. 326 does not apply to a case based on contract. The learned Judges were of the opinion that the point did not arise in the view which they took of the case. They, however, discuss the point at p. 455 of the report and they say:

"We would only say that S. 326 should be interpreted according to the terms of that section, and that no decisions as to the differently worded terms of other sections of other Acts are of assistance in interpreting this section. It is noticeable that section 326 speaks of suits" in respect of an act done or purporting to have been done by the Board in its official capacity." The words "in respect of an act done" would appear to us to include an omission because every omission must have reference to some act or series of acts. We also consider that a Board must be deemed to have acted in its official capacity, even though its action was not taken directly under any provision of the Act, but indirectly in pursuance of a contract executed directly under the provisions of the Act, for even in the latter case it must be held to have acted in an official capacity.

A Board indeed can only act in an unofficial capacity when it acts otherwise than under colour of any power conferred on it. The exceptions provided for in sub-sections 3 and 4 of the Act show that the section was meant to include suits of every description, even suits based on contracts."

[38] In 8 Luck. 1[8] which was also a suit arising out of a contract, two questions were referred to a Full Bench for decision, the second was:

"Is the suit barred by limitation under the provisions of S. 326, U. P. Municipalities Act ?"

In expressing his opinion on this question, Sir Syed Wazir Hasan, the then C. J. says :

"In the course of arguments before us the plaintiff's learned advocate raised the contention that S. 326, U. P. Municipalities Act, is inapplicable to this case. I had great difficulty in appreciating the argument. I am of opinion that the section is applicable to the suit. The suit would be barred under sub-s. (3) of S. 326, if it is commenced otherwise than within six months after the accrual of the cause of action. The precise question for determination therefore is as to the date when the cause of action accrued."

[39] This is a Full Bench decision of the Court which we are bound to follow. The learned advocate for the plaintiff, however, contended that the remarks are merely obiter dicta since it was, in the view taken by the Court, not necessary to decide the point. We cannot agree with this contention, the question of limitation had definitely been referred to the Full Bench and the Full Bench was giving an answer. Thus the remarks were not obiter dicta.

[40] In spite of this Full Bench decision, the advocate addressed lengthy arguments to us on this question basing himself on some decisions of the Allahabad Court and other High Courts and requested us, if we did not agree with his contentions that the remarks in 8 Luck. 1[8] were obiter dicta, to refer the point again to a Full Bench for reconsideration. We have examined all the decisions upon which the learned counsel relies and we have come to the conclusion that the decision of the Full Bench in 8 Luck. 1[8] does not require reconsideration and should be followed.

[41] It seems that in the Allahabad High Court there has been a conflict of opinion on this question. We have already referred to two cases in which the limitation laid down in S. 326, U. P. Municipalities Act, was held to apply even in suits arising out of contract. In a later case (A. I. R. 1930 ALL. 365[9]), this question was definitely raised and decided. In that case their Lordships at p. 367 of the report, say :

"The plaintiff contends that the scope of cl. (1) is confined to suit for compensation for wrongful acts on the part of the Municipal Board or of its member, officer or servant and that the words 'act done', should be construed as wrongful or tortious act sounding in damages. An examination of the language of cl. 1 does not lend itself to the interpretation which is sought to be put upon it. The clause provides that the notice must explicitly state the cause of action, the nature of the relief sought and the amount of compensation claimed. The scope of the suits has not been confined to suits for damages founded upon tort. No limitation has been put either as to the nature of the cause of action or as to the nature of the relief claimed. Clause (4) clearly indicates that the relief claimed under cl. (1) may be one for an injunction. The only suits which for purposes of limitation have been excepted from the broad scope of suits referred to in cl. (1) are suits for recovery of immovable property or for a declaration of title thereto. The words "cause of action", are of sufficient amplitude to cover cases involving the infraction of an absolute right or of a right arising out of a contract and also of a right to compensation flowing from tort. The words 'amount of compensation claimed' do not narrow down the denotation of either 'the cause of action' or 'the nature of the relief sought' to mere suits for damages founded upon tort and evidently mean no more than this that where the plaintiff sues for damages he must specify the amount of compensation."

[42] The learned advocate for the plaintiff challenged the correctness of this decision on the ground that its very basis, namely that actions for possession, declaration of title and injunction are not actions in tort, is incorrect. He contended that such actions are also actions in tort. Of course the word "tort" literally means "wrong" and consequently of most actions whether arising ex contractu or otherwise, it may be said that they arise out of a tort, but an action in tort has a special signification and it is surprising that a senior counsel like Mr. Ram Bharosey Lal, relying upon some stray passages here and there, in Underhill's Work on Torts should have persisted for a considerable length of time in such an argument in spite of the fact that, though a tort has never been accurately defined, yet one of its essential ingredients has always been considered to be that it is wrong for which the compensation is in damages. The confusion in the mind of the learned advocate seems to be due to his failure to differentiate an action of trespass from such a trespass as gives rise to an action of ejectment.

[43] Underhill in his work on Torts makes it clear that "in order to maintain an action of trespass, the plaintiff must be in possession of the land; for it is an injury to possession rather than to title. A mere intersse termini is not sufficient. But constructive possession, i. e., by a servant or agent, or a present right to possess although no physical transfer has taken place, is sufficient."

[44] In an action for ejectment, which also is the result of a trespass, it is the wrong-doer that is in possession. This distinction is made clear in one of the decisions of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee which the learned advocate himself placed before us (A. I. R. 1917 P. C. 253[10]) At p. 254 of the report their Lordships say :

"If a wrong doer is in actual possession, the real form of action at common law should be one of ejectment. Though the difference between such an action and one of trespass is now of no practical importance if the facts are properly alleged".

[45] The learned advocate also drew our attention to the fact that in the part headed "Of Rules relating to particular torts" there is a section dealing with dispossession. He has, however, failed to notice that the text makes it clear that this is so entered because "the successful plaintiff gets a judgment for possession and mesne profits i. e., damages for the profits of the land . . . . ".

Thus such a suit combines two reliefs — one for possession and the other for damages. This is why it is described in this section. This is, however, no authority for saying that suit, in so far as it relates to the relief for possession, is also action of tort. Indeed the same section makes it clear; as their Lordships have done in A. I. R. 1917 P. C. 253,[10] that before the Judicature Act, 1873, the remedy for this wrong was by an action of ejectment.

[46] There is nothing in any of the decisions placed before us on this point to indicate that any Court has ever held that an action for possession of land or for injunction is an action in tort and we need not refer to them. Thus the ground on which the decision in A. I. R. 1930 ALL. 365[9] is challenged is without substance. We should like to point out that the same reasoning was adopted by this Court in 1 Luck. 444.[7]

[47] It is true that in A. I. R. 1933 ALL. 785,[3] following a decision of the Bombay High Court in A. I. R. 1933 Bom. 164[11] it was held that S. 326 is intended to cover wrongful acts done by a Municipal Board but not cases arising ex contractu. The learned Judges simply say that in case of restrictions on ordinary rights more must not be read into the words than is necessary and that in their opinion no special privileges should accrue to the Municipal Board in the matter of limitation in suits arising ex contractu.

[48] The decision which the learned Judges followed related to the construction of a different statute in which notice was only required in respect of cases arising out of acts done "in pursuance of the act." The Bombay High Court held that claim under contracts could not be covered by these words. Even on this point this Court has taken a different view in 1 Luck. 444.[7] But even supposing the Bombay view to be correct, with all respect to the learned Judges who decided the Allahabad case, the absence of the words "in pursuance of the Act" in the United Provinces Act makes a great deal of difference.

[49] The view expressed in A. I. R. 1933 ALL. 785[3] in the general terms in which it was stated cannot have effect now in view of a Full Bench decision of the same Court in A. I. R. 1936 ALL. 18[12] in which the learned Judges, in interpreting a similar provision in S. 192, U. P. Municipalities Act, held that it could not be said that the section was not applicable to any case arising out of contracts but it depended upon the action complained of in each case to determine whether it could be considered to be an "illegal omission" of such a character as to bring it within the definition of action contained in the General Clauses Act. The learned Judges relied upon two cases of the Judicial Committee reported in 61 I. A. 171[4] and 54 I. A. 338[13] both of which related to the interpretation of S. 80, Civil P. C.

[50] The first of the appeals mentioned arose out of a suit brought by a mortgagee for enforcement of a mortgage executed by a manager appointed under S. 95, Bengal Tenancy Act. It was pleaded that the suit was bad because the two months' previous notice required by S. 80 had not been given. Their Lordships held that, even if it were assumed that the manager was a public officer, the failure to pay the mortgage was not such an illegal omission as to make 'an act' purporting to be done 'by the manager in his official capacity,' and that consequently S. 80, Civil P. C., did not bar the suit. Their Lordships, however, took care to state at page 176 of the report:

"The learned Subordinate Judge held that the section had no application to suits in contract, and this dictum was rightly repelled by Mukerji J., who delivered the judgment of the High Court. Having regard to the decision of this Board in 54 I. A. 338[13] their Lordships think that no such distinction is possible. The learned Judges of the High Court, however, seem to have regarded the suit as based on a breach of contract, which they thought would be an "act" within the contemplation of the section. Their Lordships do not suggest that a claim based upon a breach of contract by a public officer may not in many cases be sufficient to entitle him to notice under the section, but they are unable, for the reasons already given, to agree with the learned Judges that the omission by the first respondent to pay off the mortgage was such a breach."

[51] After this decision, however, a Division Bench of the Allahabad High Court once more reverted to the view expressed in A. I. R. 1933 ALL. 785[3] vide 1939 A. W. R. 211.[14] In that case, however, the Full Bench decision of the Allahabad High Court was not placed before the learned Judges nor is any other case discussed by them but they simply follow the old case in 2 C. W. N. 689.[15]

[52] A review of these cases shows that the preponderance of authority even in the Allahabad High Court is in favour of the view taken by this Court and we have been shown no reason to induce us to doubt the correctness of that view. We hold, therefore, that the plaintiff can only be allowed six months salary in each case.

[53] One or two minor points remain to be disposed of. In deciding the appeal in suit No. 224/165 of 1943, the learned Civil Judge gives as one of the reasons for disallowing the plaintiff's claim for arrears of salary, the absence of evidence to show that the plaintiff was willing to do his work after the order of the Chairman directing his removal. He further says that since the powers of the Chairman with regard to the water works were transferred to the Superintending Engineer, Public Health Department

"the plaintiff cannot now be dismissed by the Chairman Municipal Board and the Superintendent Water Works cannot recognise the plaintiff as in service of the water works in view of the fact that the plaintiff has not been doing any work."

This reasoning is wholly unwarranted and there is no plea by the Municipal Board which would justify a consideration of these matters or which would impose upon the plaintiff the duty of showing that he was always prepared to work for the Board. Further these considerations are wholly irrelevant. If an official has been removed by a wrong order, he cannot insist upon doing the work in spite of the wrong order until his dismissal is set aside; the mere passing of the order of removal is sufficient evidence that he will not be permitted to work. To hold otherwise would be to create confusion, since, according to this view, it would be necessary for the discharged servant, who has filed an appeal against his dismissal, to insist on continuing to do the work in order to get his salary if his appeal is allowed, while the dismissing authority would equally insist on its order being considered valid. Thus, the principle which the learned Civil Judge has adumbrated is wholly untenable. Further, if the Chairman's power of dismissal was conferred on the Superintending Engineer the latter would have exercised it if he thought it necessary. If on the other hand, it was not taken away, the Chairman could still exercise it. It cannot be that there was no authority left with the power of either dismissing or employing officials in the Water Works Department. Thus both these objections, which seem to have been raised by the learned Civil Judge suo motu are wholly untenable.

[54] In Suit No. 36 of 1944, the plaintiff claimed salary at the rate of Rs. 100 per month plus dearness allowance plus motor cycle allowance at the rate of Rs. 28. per month. The notice claimed salary only at the rate of Rs. 96 per month and did not mention anything about the dearness allowance or the motor cycle allowance. The Courts below have disallowed the claim for an increment in salary and for motor cycle allowance on the ground that they were not covered by the notice but have allowed the claim to dearness allowance. The reason for this distinction does not appear because S. 326 (1), U. P. Municipalities Act also requires the notice to state the amount of compensation claimed and the plaintiff cannot get anything more than that amount. Thus the dearness allowance, not having been mentioned in the notice cannot be awarded.

[55] The result is that Appeal No. 256 of 1944 is partly allowed with proportionate costs of this Court as well as of the lower appellate Court. Appeals Nos. 389 of 1943 and 407 of 1945 are dismissed with costs of this and the lower appellate Courts. Appeal No. 388 of 1943 is partly allowed and the plaintiff's suit is decreed for Rs. 576 only and is dismissed with regard to the balance of the salary claimed. Similarly Appeal No. 452 of 1945 is partly allowed and the amount of salary decreed is reduced to Rs. 576 only. Appeal No. 253 of 1944 is dismissed with costs. The parties will receive and pay costs in Appeals Nos. 388 of 1943, and 452 of 1945 in this Court, Appeals Nos. 74 of 1943, and 24/1/73, 196 of 1944-45 in the lower appellate Court and in the original suits in the trial Court in proportion to their success and failure.

B. Hirday Narain Dhaon— Defendant—Appellant v. Har Prasad — Plaintiff — Respondent.

Second Appeal No. 342 of 1942, Decided on 18-1-1948, from order of Dist. Judge, Lucknow, D/- 7-8-1942.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 100 — Finding of fact — Lower appellate Court not applying its mind nor considering evidence — Finding is not binding in second appeal.

Where it appears that in arriving at a finding of fact the first appellate Court did not consider the oral evidence, nor did it apply its mind to the question, it is not possible to say that there is any finding of fact which should not be interfered with in second appeal.

[Para 14]

Annotation : ('44-Com.) Civil P. C., Ss. 100-101 N. 53.

(b) Tort—Malicious prosecution— Person giving information to police if and when real "prosecutor" indicated.

If a complainant does not go beyond giving what he believed to be correct information to the police, and the police, without further interference on his part (except giving such honest assistance as they may require), think fit to prosecute, it would be improper to make him responsible in damages for the failure of the prosecution. But if the charge is false to the knowledge of the complainant, if he misleads the police by bringing suborned witnesses to support it, if he influences the police to assist him in sending an innocent man for trial before the Magistrate, it would be equally improper to allow him to escape liability because the prosecution has not, technically, been conducted by him. The question in all cases of this kind must be, who was the prosecutor and the answer must depend upon the whole circumstances of the case. The mere setting of the law in motion is not the criterion ; the conduct of the complainant, before and after making the charge, must also be taken into consideration. Nor is it enough to say that the prosecution was instituted and conducted by the police. That again in a question of fact. Thus, although a person who gives information to the police and renders to it such assistance as it may require does not thereby become liable in an action for malicious prosecution, he does become so liable if he has made himself the prosecutor by his conduct both before and after the prosecution was launched : 30 All. 525 (P. C.), Rel. on.; Case law referred. [Paras 15, 16]

Where the information given by the complainant to the police did not contain full and accurate statement of facts and the facts which would exonerate the person (complained against) of criminal liability were omitted while words were added which would make him guilty of an offence and in subsequent application the complainant had called himself the complainant :

Held that the complainant already associated himself with the prosecution as a prosecutor and that he could not escape liability if it was shown that he acted without reasonable and probable cause and was actuated by malice. [Para 25]

(c) Tort—Malicious prosecution—"Malice" means any indirect or improper motive.

The word 'malice' as used in connection with malicious prosecution has a technical meaning. It means malus animus or any indirect or improper motive and not the vindication of the law. But a prosecution is not malicious merely because it is inspired by anger : 34 A. I. R. 1947 Oudh 116 ; 25 A.I.R. 1938 Cal. 829 ; 25 A.I.R. 1938 Pat. 529 and 31 A. I. R. 1944 P. C. 1, Rel. on. [Para 26]

(d) Tort — Malicious prosecution — Reasonable and probable cause.

If it appears that the facts as known to the defendant at the time when he made a report to the police, were such as to induce a reasonable belief in his mind that an offence had been committed, he would not be liable for damages for malicious prosecution if it was subsequently found that no such offence was committed. Saraswati Prasad — for Appellant.
K. P. Misra — for Respondent.

Judgment.—The appellant is a doctor practising in Daliganj in the city of Lucknow and the respondent is a shop-keeper in Aliganj in the same city. In September or October 1939 both the parties had ordered some goods from Calcutta : the appellant had ordered medicines and glucose D while the respondent had ordered tea. Parcels for both the parties were booked to the Mohibullahpur Railway Station of the O. T. (then known as the B. N. W.) Railway and both sets of parcels arrived at the Railway station on 11th October 1939. On that day in the evening, a servant of the respondent went and got three parcels released but, by mistake of the authorities, the appellant's parcels were handed to him. This mistake was discovered by the respondent at about 9.0 A. M. when one of the parcels was opened at his shop by his servant. The appellant went to the railway station at about 10.0 A. M. on 12th October 1939. On his asking for his parcels he was told that they had been delivered by mistake to a servant of the firm of which the respondent was the proprietor and that a railway employee had been sent to get them back. The appellant was asked to send for them later in the day. The appellant himself went about half an hour later. By that time the railway employee had returned but he had not taken back the parcels. (The Station Master, Babu Harbans Lal, D. W. 4, states that the respondent had sent word that he would bring the parcels back himself and that he had informed the appellant of this while the appellant as D. W. 1 denies having received any such information.) Thereupon the appellant himself proceeded to the respondent's shop to get the parcels. The appellant asserts that he had a note from the Station Master asking the respondent to deliver the parcels to the appellant, but the respondent denies this. The respondent did not deliver the parcels and so the appellant went to the railway station Mohibullapur and from there to the police station Mandiaon, which is close by and within the jurisdiction of which the station lay. At the police station he lodged a report which is Ex. 2.

[2] Exhibit 2 indicates that an offence under S. 406/411, Penal Code, had been committed by the respondent at the railway station, Mohibullapur in the morning of 12th October 1939. The material part of the actual report, however, is in the following words :

"Main mal chhorane aj subah Mohibullapur station par aya — station master saheb say mal ki nisbat daryaft kiya to malum hua ki Ganga Din Har Prasad ki dukan Aliganj ka admi ghalti say woh mal chhora-kar laigaya — main Mubammad Shuaib aur Abdul Ahad ko sath laikar Aliganj pahuncha —malik dukan say bat chit hui to parsalon ka lana taslim karta hai —main ne usko batlaya ki woh parcel mere hain wapas kardo lekin wapas karne ke mutabiq woh inkar karta hai chunki yeh sakhs baddiyanti say jante hue mary chizon ko apne qabze men ab bhi rakhe hue hai lihaza ittla karta hun."

[3] This report is signed by the appellant. After it had been lodged the police went to the respondent's shop and demanded the parcels. There was some dispute, about the reasons for which various allegations are made, but eventually the police took possession of all the three parcels, which were sealed then and there and entrusted to the appellant under a supurdnama, Ex. 16, in which the appellant undertook not to open the parcels until the Magistrate so ordered. A recovery list was prepared and a receipt for the parcels was given to the respondent. On 3rd November 1939, the appellant made an application to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Lucknow, stating that the three parcels contained medicines of which he was badly in need and seeking permission to open them and take out his medicines— Ex. 15. In this application it was stated that, at the time of the recovery by the police, two of the packages were found to have been opened by the accused and that they had been sealed by the police without comparing the contents with the invoice. It then proceeded,

"I, the complainant, am not yet in the know of the fact whether the contents of the packages were intact in accordance with the invoice or not."

[4] On this application a police report was called for and, on the police stating that there was no objection to the grant of the application, the parcels were ordered to be opened. This was done on 15th November 1939 on which date the appellant gave a receipt, a copy of which is Ex. A-5, in which he acknowledged receipt of all the articles mentioned in the list — which is a part of Ex. 15—receipt of four tins of Glucose D.

[5] Thereafter, on 8 h December 1939, a charge-sheet was submitted against the respondent in which he was charged not only under Ss. 406/411, Penal Code, but also under S. 379, Penal Code. The trial commenced on 11th January 1940, and the respondent was acquitted by Tahsil Bench of Honorary Magistrates of Lucknow, by its order, dated 27th June 1940 : vide Ex. 1.

[6] The suit out of which this appeal arises was commenced by the respondent on 2nd July 1941. He alleged that the prosecution initiated by the appellant by lodging the First Information Report Ex. 2, was false, and without reasonable and probable cause and had been inspired by malice. He accordingly claimed a decree for Rs. 2,000 as damages for malicious prosecution.

[7] The defendant-appellant pleaded that the report had been made after consultation with the railway authorities — the Station Master of Mohibullapur — and was not inspired by any malice but was the result of what the appellant felt it to be his duty to do. That, in any case, the defendant had reasonable and probable cause for his action and consequently the suit should be dismissed.

[8] The trial Court held that the proceedings had not been commenced without reasonable and probable cause and that there was no ill-will or malice behind the report. It also held that, apart from lodging the first information report, nothing was done by the defendant which would constitute him the prosecutor and that, consequently, it cannot be said that the defendant was responsible for the prosecution. On those findings the suit was dismissed.

[9] The plaintiff appealed and the District Judge of Lucknow allowed the appeal. He thought that the question that really called for decision was whether there was any justification for the defendant to make a report under Ss. 406/411, Penal Code, when the plaintiff refused to hand over the boxes to him, and upon this question, he held that there was no such justification. He held that the evidence of Station Master, Babu Harbans Lal, P. W. 4, to the effect that the plaintiff had sent word that he would be soon returning the parcels and that he had informed the defendant of this should be believed and that consequently the defendant should have had no real fear that he would not get back his parcels within a reasonable time, which inference he finds to be supported by the statement of the defendant himself. The learned District Judge also held that the real motive behind the report was not that the defendant suspected that an offence would be committed in respect of his property but he desired to get the boxes back as quickly as possible with the help of the police. He also held that the subsequent statement of the defendant further proved malice and the fact that the defendant was the real prosecutor or was, at any rate, assisting the prosecution. He consequently passed a decree for Rs. 1150 as damages out of which Rs. 400 were on account of the expenses of the criminal case and Rs. 750 were for the mental pain and worry occasioned by the prosecution.

[10] The defendant has come up in second appeal and his learned advocate has contended that the lower appellate Court has entirely misdirected itself to the case and that it has failed to notice that the mere lodging of a report is not the commencement of a criminal litigation. He contends that the defendant has merely made a true and accurate statement of the facts of the case to the police without formulating any charge or asking for any enquiry, after which the police undertook an enquiry and started a case on its own responsibility. He accordingly contended that the defendant was not a prosecutor at all and that consequently he would not be held liable for any damages for malicious prosecution.

[11] In the alternative, the learned advocate contended that, even if the defendant is held responsible for the prosecution, there was reasonable and probable cause and no malice, which required independent proof, was legally proved.

[12] On the other hand, the learned counsel for the respondent contended that this appeal was concluded by findings of fact and, in the alternative, that the evidence on the record supported the conclusions at which the lower appellate Court had arrived since it established that the defendant was actually acting as the prosecutor or was rendering such assistance to the prosecution as to make him liable as a prosecutor. He has contended that malice is any indirect or improper motive, apart from a desire to vindicate the law and that consequently the 'malice' which is required to constitute a case of malicious prosecution has been established.

[13] In support of his plea that the case was concluded by findings of fact, the learned counsel relied upon A. I. R. 1936 ALL. 441,[1] A. I. R. 1939 ALL. 554[2] and A.I.R. 1946 Nag. 46.[3] To these may be added a decision of this Court in 1944 O. W. N. 64.[4] In the last mentioned case a Bench of this Court reversed a decision of a single Judge on an appeal under S. 12 (2), Avadh Courts Act, and held that the single Judge did not have jurisdiction to reverse the findings of fact arrived at by the first appellate Court and arrive at fresh findings of fact for himself.

[14] The decisions to which reference has been made do not affect the case before me because the learned District Judge has himself stated that he had not been through the oral evidence as to what had taken place on the day of the occurrence at the plaintiff's shop and, in arriving at a finding as to what was the motive of the defendant in making the report, it was necessary for him to ascertain which of the two rival versions of the incidents were correct. Moreover the learned District Judge does not seem to have applied his mind to the question whether the defendant was, in fact, a prosecutor or not. From certain paragraphs in his judgment it appears as if he was confusing the lodging of a report with the filing of a complaint. It is not possible to say that, in the present case, there is any finding of fact which should not be interfered with in second appeal. A consideration of the evidence on the record, however, establishes the fact that the defendant had so associated himself with the prosecution as to be a de facto prosecutor and that he acted with malice and without reasonable and probable cause:

[15] In 35 I.A. 189[5] their Lordships of Judicial Committee say, at pp. 192 and 193.

"It will be convenient to refer at once to the decision of the Madras High Court: 26 Mad 362[6] which the learned Judicial Commissioner appears to have followed with some reluctance. The judgment is in these terms: "The only person who can be sued in an action for malicious prosecution is the person who prosecutes. In this case, though defendant 1 may have instituted criminal proceedings before the police, he certainly did not prosecute the plaintiff. He merely gave information to the police, and the police, after investigation, appear to have thought fit to prosecute the plaintiff. The defendant is not responsible for their act, and no action lies against him for malicious prosecution."

The principle here laid down is sound enough if properly understood, and its application to the particular case was no doubt justified; but, in the opinion of their Lordships, it is not of universal application. In India the police have special powers in regard to the investigation of criminal charges, and it depends very much on the result of their investigation whether or not further proceedings are taken against the person accused. If, therefore, a complainant does not go beyond giving what he believed to be correct information to the police, and the police, without further interference on his part (except giving such honest assistance as they may require), think fit to prosecute, it would be improper to make him responsible in damages for the failure of the prosecution. But if the charge is false to the knowledge of the complainant, if he misleads the police by bringing suborned witnesses to support it, if he influences the police to assist him in sending an innocent man for trial before the Magistrate, it would be equally improper to allow him to escape liability because the prosecution has not, technically, been conducted by him. The question in all cases of this kind must be, who was the prosecutor and the answer must depend upon the whole circumstances of the case. The mere setting of the law in motion is not the criterion; the conduct of the complainant, before and after making the charge, must also be taken into consideration. Nor is it enough to say that the prosecution was instituted and conducted by the police. That again is a question of fact."

[16] Thus according to their Lordships, although a person who gives information to the police and renders to it such assistance as it may require does not thereby become liable in an action for malicious prosecution, he does become so liable if he has made himself the prosecutor by his conduct both before and after the prosecution was launched.

[17] After considering this decision as well as another decision of the Judicial Committee, a learned Judge of the Allahabad High Court in A. I. R. 1940 ALL. 231[7] stated at p. 232 of the report:

"It is obvious from these remarks that the question is whether the defendant is substantially responsible for the prosecution of the plaintiff and whether he has or has not acted in good faith."

To the same effect is the view expressed in A. I. R. 1937 Sind 44[8] at p. 45 and A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 392[9] at p. 394. In A. I. R. 1935 Bom. 320[10] a learned Judge of the Bombay High Court says at pp. 325 and 326 of the report:

"To prosecute is to set the law in motion, and the law is only set in motion by an appeal to some person clothed with judicial authority in regard to the matter in question. The defendant must be the person who set the law in motion against the plaintiff. It is not necessary, however, that he should be a party to the proceedings. In the case of malicious prosecution by way of indictment in name of the King, the person liable is the prosecutor to whose instigation the proceedings are due. Instigating a prosecution is, however, to be distinguished from the act of merely giving information on the strength of which a prosecution is commenced by some one in the exercise of his own discretion. The gist of the action for malicious prosecution is that the defendant sets the Magistrate in motion. A person who simply makes a candid statement of facts to a Magistrate without formulating any charge is not responsible for the consequences of any step which the Magistrate may thereupon in the exercise of his discretion think fit to take. The Magistrate acts of his own motion and not at the instigation of the person giving the information, who therefore is not to be considered as a prosecutor."

[18] Thus on the view expressed in all these decisions the mere giving of information of true facts, including the fact that a particular person is suspected, either to the police or to the Magistrate does not make a person liable to damages for malicious prosecution if the prosecution launched as a result of that information fails. We have, therefore, to ascertain whether in the present case the defendant did anything more than give full and accurate information to the police.

[19] The information which the defendant gave is contained in Ex. 2. The question is, is it full and accurate? Exhibit 2 is signed by the defendant. It shows that the police was taking down a report under Ss. 406/411, Penal Code, in respect of an offence said to have been committed at Railway Station Mohibullapur. Then in the facts stated in the body of the report it is stated that the plaintiff refused to return the parcels although the defendant had assured him that they were his. The report then proceeds, "Chunki yeh Shakhs baddiyanti say jante hue mery chizon ko apne qabze men ab bhi rakhe hue hai lihaza ittla karta hun."

[20] It is true that the defendant does not in so many words ask for an enquiry but the whole object of giving information to the police is to get an enquiry made or to get assistance to recover the property. In this case the defendant himself stated as D. W. 1 that he went to police because he wanted his property delivered at once. Obviously, therefore, he wanted the police to take action and we find that the police did, in fact, take action. D. W. 5, Shyam Kishori Lal, the officer who took action, would have the Court believe that he took action on his own responsibility without instigation from the defendant; but he also states that he started the case only because the plaintiff did not give the parcels to him when he went and that he would not have started the case merely because the plaintiff refused to give the parcels to the defendant. Moreover, according to him, he has forgotten most of the important incidents.

[21] It is somewhat surprising that he should make this last statement because, if what he says is true, he had no business to go to the plaintiff's shop. The police are only expected to intervene in the matter if the facts of a report disclose that some criminal offence has been committed. If the facts stated do not disclose even a prima facie criminal case, the police has no business to interfere in the matter. If this statement was to be believed, read with the statement of the defendant as D. W. 1 that, "at the time of the report I believed that Har Prasad would return the boxes and that it would take some time. I wanted them to be delivered at once," it would indicate that, as a matter of fact, no offence had been committed by the plaintiff and that was a conspiracy between the defendant and the police of police station Mandiaon to use police influence to get direct delivery of the parcels for the defendant, a conspiracy which was miscarried and by reason of which the hands of the police were forced so that they had to commence a prosecution.

[22] In this view of the matter the defendant must clearly be held responsible for launching a false prosecution. If, on the other hand, the statement of D. W. 5 is not believed, it means that the report did disclose the commission of an offence. If the language of Ex. 2 is examined, it will be found that this is so. It clearly indicates that the plaintiff although he knew who the real owner of the parcels was, refused to deliver the parcels to that owner by reason of bad faith. This was not a full and accurate account of what the position was. Both the Station Master, D. W. 4, Harbans Lal, who has been believed on this point by the District Judge and the plaintiff himself as P. W. 2 have stated that the defendant was informed that the parcels would be returned to the station master and he could take them back from there. Defendant D. W. 1, did not deny this but satisfied himself with saying that he did not remember whether Har Prasad had told that he would return the boxes to the Railway Station. If this was so, and there is no reason why I should not accept the finding of the District Judge that it was so, obviously there was no 'baddiyanti' in the plaintiff not returning the boxes to the defendant whom, it is agreed, he did not know from before.

[23] The defendant stated that he was given a slip by the Station Master to deliver it to the plaintiff. The Station Master at first denied having given such a slip but later he admitted that he had given one. This slip was not produced and the defendant stated he had lost it before he even got to the police station for making the report. It cannot be said what this slip contained and there is no reliable evidence to prove that it was shown to the plaintiff. There is no mention of any such slip in EX. 2. In these circumstances, it cannot possibly be said that the plaintiff, in not delivering parcels to a person whom he did not know, and promising to send them back to the Railway Station from where he had got them, was actuated by any dishonest motives.

[24] Thus the statement of facts given in EX. 2 was not full and accurate and facts which would exonerate the defendant of criminal liability were omitted while words were added which would make him guilty of an offence.

[25] Further we have it from EX. 15, the copy of an application made by the defendant to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Lucknow, on 3-11-1939, that the police authorities had recovered the packages on his request. In the same application he calls himself the complainant, which indicates that that was the position which he thought he was actually occupying at the time. This would make it highly probable that he was doing all that a prosecutor would do to prosecute the case to a successful conclusion. The defendant thus clearly associated himself with the prosecution as a prosecutor and he cannot escape liability if it is shown that he acted without reasonable and probable cause and was actuated by malice.

[26] The word 'malice' as used in connection with malicious prosecutor has a technical meaning. It means malus animus or any indirect or improper motive and not the vindication of the law: vide 1946 O. W. N. 307.[11] Similarly, in A. I R. 1938 Cal. 829[12] it is laid down at p. 835 of the report that "a prosecution is malicious only if it is commenced or continued with a desire to use the criminal law for a purpose for which it is not intended". See also A. I. R. 1938 Pat. 529.[13] In A I. R. 1944 P. C. 1[14] at p. 4 their Lordships of the Judicial Committee also say that malice means any indirect or improper motive though of course, they make it clear that a prosecution is not malicious merely because it is inspired by anger.

[27] In the present case, it appears from the evidence of the defendant himself as D. W. 1 that he made the report only to get back the parcels as early as possible that is to say, that he invoked the aid of the criminal law by making a report merely in order to get back his parcels early whether any offence had or had not, in fact, been committed. Thus the action of the defendant was not to vindicate the law but was with an indirect motive. This is sufficient 'malice' to justify an action for malicious prosecution. It is thus not necessary for me to consider how the application, of which EX. 15 is a copy came to be made on which point there was considerable debate at the bar.

[28] The only question that remains is whether the defendant had reasonable and probable cause for the initiation of the proceedings. If it appears that the facts as known to the defendant at the time were such as to induce a reasonable belief in his mind that an offence had been committed, he would not be liable if it was subsquently found that no such offence was committed. In the present case, if only the prosecution under Ss. 406/411, Penal Code is considered, leaving out of consideration the charge under S. 379, Penal Code, it would appear that the defendant could not entertain a reasonable belief that any offence had been committed. The plaintiff refused to return the parcels to the defendant but he did state that he would send them back to the Railway Station. The defendant knew that he was not known to the plaintiff from before and so the latter could not reasonably return the parcels to him. His refusal to do so did not constitute an offence or a crimial misappropriation of the property belonging to another.

[29] The plaintiff had only got to know of the mistake as to the parcles at about 9 0 A. M. on that very morning. He had since then informed the Station Master and the defendant that he would return the parcels to the Railway Station. He had his own parcels at the station which he would naturally be anxious to get back but he would try to avoid two journies and would like to get his own parcels by the same conveyance—or labour—by which he sent the defendant's parcels back. He states that he had already made arrangements for returning the parcels when his programme was upset by the arrival of the police.

[30] Then there is the statement of the defendant himself as D. W. 1 and he states that, at the time that he made the report to the police, he had no idea that Har Prasad would not return the boxes. This makes it quite clear that the defendant did not believe, at the time of making the report that any criminal offence had been committed. He had, therefore, no reasonable or probable cause for making the report.

[31] The result is that the decision of the District Judge must be upheld and this appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. The stay order dated 23 12-1942 is vacated.

Civil Reference No. 2 of 1942, Decided on 19-11-1947.

Court-fees Act (1870), S. 7 (iv) (a) (U. P.) — Suit for declarations and injunctions—Prayer for declaration that plaintiff was entitled to future profits of bazar and to accumulated profits—As regards future profits ad valorem court-fee under S. 7 (v) held must be paid — Suit held was under-valued and valuation could be corrected by Court —Value of declaration or consequential relief held could not be less than amount of accumulated profits.

The plaintiffs brought a suit for certain declarations and injunctions and prayed: "(1) that it be declared that they alone are entitled to the future profits of the bazar and to the accumulated profits which are in deposit with the sub-Divisional Magistrate, and (2) that an injunction be issued against the defendants restraining them from interfering in the plaintiff's management of the bazar and in making realisations therein and that they be also restrained from causing any interference in the realisations of Rs. 3800 which were in deposit with the Magistrate." The jurisdictional value as to the future right to realize the profits had been assessed at Rs. 8000. The relief claimed in respect of Rs. 3800 had not been separately valued. The total valuation of the suit for purposes of court-fee was fixed at Rs. 200 only :

Held (1) that suit so far as it related to the future profits of the bazar necessitated the payment of court-fee at an ad valorem scale on Rs. 8000 under sub-s. (v) of S. 7 in accordance with the proviso to S. 7 (IV) : 27 A. I. R. 1940 Oudh 249, Rel. on. [Para 5]

(2) that the relief with respect to Rs. 3800 in deposit with the Magistrate had obviously been under-valued in an arbitrary manner and it was open to the Court to charge upon what it may call the true value of the relief. It was obvious that the value of the declaration or the consequential relief regarding Rs. 3800 could not be less than Rs. 3800: Case law referred. [Para 6]

Government Advocate (Basir Ullah Beg) — for Chief Inspector of Stamps.

Anand Madhava – for Opposite Party.

Order.— This is a reference by the Chief Inspector of Stamps under S. 6-B (1) (introduced by ?) Court-fees (Amendment) Act of 1938. It raises a question regarding the sufficiency or otherwise of court-fee paid by the plaintiffs Subedar Singh and others in suit No. 37 of 1940 instituted by them in the Court of the learned civil Judge, Unao. The suit was for certain declarations and injunctions. The reliefs related to the right to realise the profits of a bazar which is held on certain abadi and kishtwar plots in village Birwaghat, district Unao. There was, it appears, an agreement in or about the year 1921 between Madho Singh (father of plaintiff 1), Gumani Singh, plaintiff 2 and Gajraj Singh, father of defendants 1 and 2 for starting the bazar and for sharing the profits in certain proportions. The aforesaid agreement was said to have been varied on 8-11-1932, and the share of profits of defendants 1 and 2 was reduced to a consolidated figure of Rs 5 per annum. There were disputes subsequently between the parties, and the matter was taken to criminal Court under S. 145, Criminal P. C. It is unnecessary to refer to the criminal proceedings except that a sum of Rs. 3800 representing the profits of the aforesaid bazar is still held by the S. D. M. Safipur.

[2] In the civil suit with which we are concerned the plaintiffs prayed (1) that it be declared that they alone are entitled to the future profits of the bazar and to the accumulated profits which are in deposit with the Sub Divisional Magistrate, and (2) that an injunction be issued against the defendants restraining them from interfering in the plaintiffs' management of the bazar and in making realisations therein and that they be also restrained from causing any interference in the realisations of the monies in deposit with the Magistrate.

[2a] The suit was filed on a court-fee stamp of Rs. 15 only, and the Chief Inspector of Stamps recorded an inspection note to the effect that there was a deficiency of Rs. 777 8 0. The learned Civil Judge held that the total court-fee payable was Rs. 92-8 0 and that there was only a deficiency of Rs. 77-8-0. The aforesaid amount has been made good by the plaintiffs, and their suit has since been decreed with costs. The Chief Inspector of Stamps, however, was dissatisfied with the order of the learned Civil Judge regarding court-fee and has submitted for orders of this Court under S. 6-B (1) (introduced by ?) Court-fees (Amendment) Act of 1938 his objections to the decision of the learned Civil Judge, Unao regarding the extent of deficiency.

[3] From the facts stated above, it would appear that the suit covers two items of property. The first of these items consists of the future right to realise the profits of the bazar. The jurisdictional value so far as these profits are concerned has been assessed by the plaintiffs at Rs. 8000. The aforesaid amount has been arrived at on an averment that the average annual net profits amount to Rs. 400. This sum has been multiplied by 20 in order to arrive at the jurisdictional value in accordance apparently with R. 3 (c) (ii) framed under S. 3, Suits Valuation Act. Item 2 consists of the profits amounting to Rs. 3800 which are in the custody of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate. The relief claimed in respect of the sum has not been separately valued. The total valuation of the suit for purposes of court-fee was fixed at Rs. 200 only. The Chief Inspector of Stamps considers that the total of the aforesaid figures, namely Rs. 8000 plus Rs. 3800, should be regarded as the value for the purposes of payment of court-fee, and under S. 7 (iv) (a), Court-fees Act, an ad valorem court-fee is payable on that amount. Section 7 (iv) (a) provides that in suits to obtain a declaratory decree or order, where consequential relief is prayed, the court-fee is leviable on the amount at which the relief sought is valued in the plaint or memorandum of appeal, and if the relief is with reference to immovable property court-fee should be paid on the value of the consequential relief which, if it be incapable of valuation, must be computed in accordance with sub-s. (v), (v-A) or (v-B) of S. 7. The right to collect the bazar dues constitutes no doubt an immovable property, and this right is obviously not capable of exact valuation in the ordinary way. The value must, therefore, be ascertained in accordance with sub-s. (v) of S. 7 which prescribes that 20 times the annual average of the net profits of the land during the three years immediately preceding the date of presenting the plaint should be regarded as its true value. The learned lower Court, however, did not apply this rule for ascertaining the court-fee. It held that the proviso attached to sub-s. (iv-B) applied. That sub-section relates inter alia to suits for obtaining an injunction, and the proviso lays down that the amount at which the reliefs sought should be valued for computation of court-fee should not be less than one-tenth of the market value of the property involved in or affected by the relief sought or Rs. 50 whichever is greater the maximum limit of court-fee leviable being Rs. 200. Calculated on this basis only a sum of Rs. 77-8-0 was found due.

[4] As regards the sum in deposit, the Chief Inspector of Stamps claimed that the value of the declaration and of injunction relating to the aforesaid sum must be the sum itself and that the value placed by the plaintiffs on the suit was arbitrary and inadequate. The view expressed by the learned Civil Judge in respect of this contention was that the Legislature enjoined the payment of court-fee in respect of movable property on "the amount at which the relief was valued in the plaint." The plaintiffs' counsel valued it at Rs. 200 and the Court applied the rule literally. The learned Judge did not consider it necessary to determine whether the plaintiffs' valuation was the real value of the relief which they sought. He held that Rs. 15, paid by the plaintiffs on Rs. 200 were sufficient.

[5] I have heard the learned counsel for the parties and the conclusion, to which I have reached, is that the view, expressed by the learned Civil Judge, cannot be sustained. The suit so far as it related to the future profits of the bazar necessitated the payment of court-fee at an ad valorem scale on Rs. 8000 under sub-s. (v) of S. 7. The principle, enunciated in Mrs. Janot Anna Bonarjee v. The United Provinces of Agra and Avadh[1] covers the point. The case is authority for the proposition that in a suit to obtain a declaratory decree if there is a prayer for consequential relief with respect of immovable property and the relief is incapable of valuation, the amount at which it should be valued is the value of the immovable property computed in accordance with sub-s. (v) of S. 7. The learned Judges, constituting the Division Bench considered that S. 7 (iv-B) (b) applied only to suits for injunction and not to the declaratory suits, referred to by sub-s. (iv) (a) of S. 7. The contention of the Chief Inspector of Stamps as regards this relief must, therefore, be accepetd.

[6] The relief with respect to Rs. 3,800 in deposit with the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Safipur has obviously been under-valued in an arbitrary manner. There is no doubt that S. 7 (iv) (a) confers upon the plaintiff or the appellant the right to value the relief and it is upon this value that the fee is to be charged. The question which, however, arises for determination is whether in cases where it is manifest that the valuation placed by the plaintiff cannot be the real value but is merely a fictitious value it is open to the Court to charge upon what we may call the true value of the relief. In A. I. R. 1928 Avadh 260[2] Pullan, J. considered that S. 151, Civil P. C., might be brought into use if the plaintiff made an absurd and outrageous misrepresentation as to the value of his suit in order to have it tried by a particular Court. In A. I. R. 1935 ALL. 849[3] a Division Bench of the Allahabad High Court ruled that in a suit for declaration with consequential relief it was not open to the plaintiff to give any arbitrary valuation in the plaint, and the Court was not bound by such valuation. Reliance was placed upon the earlier decisions of that Court in 1932 A. L. J. 416[4] and the principles propounded therein. Reference may also be made to three Full Bench decisions wherein the right of the Court to demand court-fee on the true valuation is recognised. These are A. I. R. 1939 Nag. 50,[5] A. I. R. 1944 Patna 17[6] A. I. R. 1937 Sind 241.[7] The plaintiffs' valuation for purposes of court-fee under S. 7 (iv) (a) must be a bona fide assessment of value and a flagrant abuse of the power, conferred on him by the sub-section, can be and should be guarded against. It is in my opinion obvious that the value of the declaration or the consequential relief regarding Rs. 3,800 cannot be less than Rs. 3,800.

[7] I agree with the Chief Inspector of Stamps that the total sum upon which court-fee was payable Rs. 11,800. There is therefore still a deficiency of Rs. 700. I accept the reference and declare accordingly. I pass no orders as to costs. Let a copy of this declaration be sent to the Collector under S. 6-B (4), Court-fees Act, for recovery of the amount.

Judgment.—By a partition decree, based on an award, to which the sons of one Lala Brij Mohan Lal Tandon were parties, a sum of Rs. 1261 was made payable by Badri Nath Tandon to his elder brother, Mr. Jagannath Prasad Tandon. Mr. Jagannath Prasad Tandon died on 28th July 1940 and on 20th December 1942, his sons, Ajodhia Nath and Radhey Shiam applied for the execution of the decree, invoking the aid of O. 21, R. 16, Civil P. C., for realisation of the money decreed. Radhey Shiam was a minor and his elder brother acted as his next friend. The deceased also left a widow but she did not join in the application.

[2] On 17th March 1942, Mr. Badri Nath filed an objection under S. 47, Civil P. C., in which he pleaded that the sum due under the decree, as well as a sum of Rs. 813 due on accounting, had been paid off to Babu Ajudhia Nath out of Court on 22nd July 1941. In the alternative, he pleaded that, at any rate he was entitled to set off against the decretal amount a sum of Rs. 1138-8-0 due under a promissory note which had been allotted to him by the same decree and which was in the possession of Babu Jagannath Prasad. It was also pleaded that the application was defective because the widow of Babu Jagannath Prasad had not joined in making it.

[3] In reply to this objection, Ajodhia Nath denied the alleged payment and pleaded that even if it was made, it being uncertified, could not be taken into consideration in the execution proceedings. He repudiated the claim to a set-off and intimated that the decree might be executed for the benefit of Mt. Doorga Devi, the widow of Babu Jagannath Prasad, also.

[4] Upon the pleadings the learned Civil Judge of Mohanlalganj, Lucknow, who was executing the decree, framed the following three issues :

1. (a) Can an uncertified payment made beyond 90 days from the presentation of the application be recognised by this Court ? (b) If so, has the decree been satisfied, as alleged ? 2. Is the applicant entitled to claim a set-off for Rs. 1,138-8-0 as alleged ? 3. Is the present application for execution not maintainable ?

[5] The trial Court found : (1) An uncertified payment cannot be recognised by the Court executing a decree. (2) That no set-off can be allowed in respect of the claim based on the pronote. (3) That the sons have been permitted by the Court to execute the decree on behalf of the mother also and so no question of impleading her arises. (4) In view of the above decisions it was not necessary to decide whether payment of the decretal amount had actually been made or not.

[6] Babu Badri Prasad Tandon filed an appeal in this Court but he died during the pendency of the appeal and the present appellants, his widow and son, have been brought on the record in his place. The appeal was first heard by the learned Chief Judge, who in view of the importance of the questions of law involved, referred the case to a Bench under the provisions of S. 14 (2), Avadh Courts Act. The appeal was accordingly placed before us and we have heard the learned counsel of the parties at considerable length.

[7] The contention of the appellants' learned counsel is that O. 21, R. 2, Civil P. C., is only applicable where payment is made to the decree-holder himself and not to any successor or transferee of the decree-holder. It is true that the definition of the word "decree-holder" given in S. 2 (3), Civil P. C., means "any person in whose favour a decree has been passed or an order capable of execution has been made." There is no reference to a successor or legal representative of the person who has obtained a decree, but that is immaterial because S. 146, Civil P. C., provides that "where any proceeding may be taken or any application made by or against any person, then the proceeding may be taken or application made against any person claiming under him."

[8] Thus in the case of a payment of the decretal amount out of Court to the successor of a decree-holder, that successor may certify payment under O. 21, R. 2 (1) or the judgment-debtor may apply against that successor under O. 21, R. 2 (2) for getting the payment recorded.

[9] The effect of S. 146, Civil P. C., is clear and leads to the result which we have indicated. Further it is only by dealing with the matter in accordance with the provisions of that section that a consistent meaning can be given to the various provisions of O. 21.

[10] For instance R. 1 of the Order provides that, among the methods by which a decree may be satisfied is payment "out of Court to the decree-holder." If the appellants' contention that the word "decree-holder" does not include the successor of a decree-holder is correct then no payment can be made out of Court to such successor in satisfaction of the decree. This is not the meaning which can be given to the provision. Indeed the appellants' learned counsel agrees that in R. 1, at any rate, the word "decree-holder" also includes the successor of the decree-holder. Were this not so, the payment which is alleged to have been made by his client to the successor of the decree-holder would not be payment of "money payable under a decree" and could not be taken into consideration at all in proceedings for the execution of the decree. The result of such a payment would, therefore, be exactly the same as if the payment made had not been certified, or recorded in, Court.

[11] If then the word "decree-holder" is given this extended meaning in R. 1, it follows that it must have the same meaning in R. 2 (1) because, at any rate, it must be open to the person who receives the payment to certify it, and since all this is by reason of S. 146, Civil P. C., there appears to be no reason why the operation of S. 146, Civil P. C., should not be extended when considering sub-r. (2) of R. 2 of O. 21, Civil P. C.

[12] The appellants' learned counsel relied upon a number of decisions which support his contention. They are 47 Bom. 643,[1] A. I. R. 1924 Bom. 394[2] and A. I. R. 1935 Nag. 230.[3]

[13] In all these cases the decree-holder transferred the decree and the transferees applied, under O. 21, R. 16, Civil P. C., for execution. The judgment-debtor pleaded that he had paid off the decretal amount to the transferee and that there was nothing to execute. It was held that in spite of the provisions of O. 21, R. 2 (3), Civil P. C., this objection could be taken. In none of these cases was any reference made to S. 146, Civil P. C., or to O. 21, R. 1. Moreover the line of reasoning adopted was entirely different. In 47 Bom. 643[1] the learned Judges held that, when an application is made under O. 21, R. 16, Civil P. C., it is made to the Court as the Court which passed the decree and not as the Court executing the decree. They then say:

"It is true that the decree-holder may be allowed, under O. 21, R. 2, sub-r. 3, to take advantage of the fact that the payment was not certified, to contend that it cannot be recognized by the Court executing the decree. But the fact remains, assuming that the payment has been made, that the decree has been satisfied and there is nothing to transfer, so that when a transferee comes to the Court which passed the decree and asks the Court to recognise him as a decree-holder, it is open to the judgment-debtor to say I have satisfied the debt which was merged in the decree."

[14] This decision was disapproved by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in A. I. R. 1943 P. C. 66.[4] Their Lordships observed:

"The rule says that 'the transferee may apply for execution of the decree to the Court which passed it.' On the face of the rule, the application to be made thereunder is an application for execution: that it is made to the Court which passed the decree does not tend to show the contrary."

[15] With regard to the remarks of the learned Judge of the Bombay High Court which we have quoted we may say, that on the face of it, they do not correctly interpret the position. At the time of the transfer, there was a debt in existence and it was subsequently extinguished. Thus the transfer was valid and the Court must give effect to it and thereafter execute the decree "in the same manner and subject to the same conditions as if the application were made by such decree-holder": vide O. 21, R. 16. Thus on a transfer taking place the procedure to be followed is exactly the same as would be followed in case the decree-holder himself sought to execute the decree and O. 21, R. 2 (3), Civil P. C., would bar the plea of payment.

[16] We may also point out that this decision as well as that in A. I. R. 1924 Bom. 394[2] have been expressly overruled in A. I. R. 1941 Bom. 302.[5]

[17] The Nagpur case followed the earlier Bombay case and certain decisions of the Madras High Court which too were overruled by a Full Bench decision of the Madras High Court in 55 Mad. 720.[6]

[18] In 56 ALL. 694[7] the same view is expressed as in the Full Bench decision. Both the Full Bench decision of the Madras High Court as well as the decision of the Allahabad High Court mentioned above received the approval of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in A. I. R. 1943 P. C. 66.[4] Thus the Nagpur case can no longer be considered as laying down good law.

[19] We have, therefore, come to the conclusion that even when a decree is sought to be executed by the successor of the original decree-holder, the provisions of O. 21, R. 2, Civil P. C., are applicable and no payment can be considered by the Court unless it has either been certified under sub-r. (1) or recorded under sub-r. (2) of that rule. The decision of the learned Civil Judge on this point is, therefore, correct and must be upheld.

[20] The second point pressed before us in appeal was that the widow not having been joined in the application, it is defective. Under O. 21, R. 15, Civil P. C., one of several joint decree-holders may execute the decree on behalf of all for their benefit. In the present case the Court has permitted them to do so and there is no conflict of interest between them. Further it is not a part of the decree that is sought to be executed but the whole of it and, therefore, it does not conflict with any provision of O. 21, R. 15, Civil P. C. In 1945 O. W. N. 136[8] a Bench of this Court, of which one of us was a member, laid down the proposition that "although the law now vests in a Hindu widow the limited interest of her husband in the joint property, it does not operate to alter the Hindu law of joint family so as to make her a member of the coparcenary. It is clear that if the property in respect of which the profits were claimed, was joint family property of Jung Bahadur and his sons, the joint family is now represented by Anant Singh and Narendra Singh alone. The provision would seem to indicate that a mere devolution of the husband's interest would not otherwise affect the joint family status as such or invest the widow with the rights of a male co-parcener other than those necessary for enforcing the interest expressly conferred on her. The right of coparcenership of a representation of the joint family is not included among the rights so conferred, and it is difficult to regard her as a legal representative of her husband in that sense."

[21] It was also held that, even if the widow was a legal representative of the deceased, the fact that some of the legal representative had applied would be sufficient to meet the requirements of the law.

[22] Thus there is no defect in the application for execution which was presented by the sons of the deceased decree-holder.

[23] The result is that this appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

MISRA AND CHANDIRAMANI JJ.

Quazi Mumtaz Ahmed—Plaintiff—Appellant v. Mt. Wasiulnisa and others — Defendants—Respondents.

First Appeal No. 33 of 1944, Decided on 17-2-1948, against decree of Civil Judge, Sitapur, D/- 29-2-1944.

(a) U. P. Encumbered Estates Act (25 [XXV] of 1934), S. 7 (3)—Section must be construed strictly —Transfer by "gift" does not include wakf alal-aulad.

Being in derogation of the ordinary law, the provision in S. 7 (3) must be construed strictly. The language of the enactment restricts the prohibition to particular kinds of transfers and without seriously violating its scope, the inclusion in it of conveyances which, notwithstanding their family resemblance, are regarded as distinct from those transfers in the eye of law, cannot be permitted. The import of the word "gift" in S. 7 (3) cannot be stretched so as to include all gratuitous transfers. Regard must be had to the question whether it is in favour of a donee who is capable of being regarded as a juristic person and therefore one who can signify his assent, or in favour of God Almighty who cannot be conceived of as such person or as capable of indicating acceptance. The waqf alal-aulad does not fulfil the requirements of a gift and cannot, therefore, be regarded as such for the purposes of sub-section (3) of S. 7. Consequently no sanction is required under S. 7 (3) for creating waqf alal-aulad : 3 A. I. R. 1916 P. C. 27 and 15 A. I. R. 1928 All. 516, Disting. [Para 7]

(b) Muhammadan law—Gift — Death bed gift— Marzulmaut, doctrine of — Applicability — There must be a proximate danger of death resulting subjectively in preponderance of apprehension.

The doctrine of marzulmaut, applies to cases where the gift is made under pressure of a sense of imminence of death. The essential condition, thus, for its application is that there must be a subjective feeling in the mind of the patient that he is not going to recover; in other words, there must be a proximate danger of death resulting subjectively in the preponderance of apprehension. The facts have to be proved like any other fact and may be evidenced by some external indicia in the patient's condition or his expressions and declarations : 35 Cal. 1 (P. C.), 35 Cal. 271 (P. Akhtar Husain and R. N. Har Kauli — for Appellant.

Mohd. Ayub and Abdul Hasan (for No. 1) and Niamat Ullah and Inayat Ullah — for Respondents Nos. 1 to 5.

Judgment.—This is a plaintiff's appeal. The point in dispute related to a deed of wakf alal-aulad executed by late Qasi Iftikhar Ahmad on 17th October 1941. He died on 11th January 1942. The plaintiff Qazi Mumtaz Ahmad is his brother. His other heirs, namely, his widow, Mt. Wasiunnisa and his daughters, Mt. Khurshed Fatima, Mt. Shakil Fatima, Mt. Saghir Fatima and Mst. Jalis Fatima are the defendants. The plaintiff claimed a three annas four pies share by inheritance in the property left by his brother and in reply to the defence based on the waqf deed of 17th October 1941, he challenged its genuineness and validity. He failed on both these points. It is unnecessary to set out in detail the various grounds upon which the invalidity of the document was alleged. Only two of them are material at this stage. The first ground was that since the waqf was executed after the passing of the order under S. 6, Encumbered Estates Act, and during the pendency of the liquidation proceedings thereunder and since the sanction of the Collector as required by S. 7, Encumbered Estates Act, was not obtained it was devoid of legal effect and was wholly inoperative. The second ground of attack was an alternative ground. It was based upon an averment that the waqf deed was executed during marzulmaut and as such it could be valid to the extent of 1/3rd only. As stated above, Qazi Mumtaz Ahmad did not succeed in his endeavour to get over the deed. His suit, therefore, failed. Dissatisfied with the decision of the learned Civil Judge of Sitapur, he has now come up in appeal.

[2] The appellant's contention about the genuineness of the deed of waqf, Ex. A2, may be disposed of shortly. (Their Lordships after going through the evidence concluded that Ex. A2 was genuine and proceeded :) The contention regarding the invalidity of Ex. A2 on account of the absence of the Collector's permission was based on the provisions of sub-s. (3) of S. 7. That sub-section prescribes inter alia that after the passing of the order under S. 6, Encumbered Estates Act, and until the Collector has declared in accordance with S. 44 that the landlord has ceased to be subject to the disabilities imposed by S. 7, Encumbered Estates Act, or until the application is dismissed or the proceedings are otherwise quashed the landlord applicant is incompetent, without the sanction of the Collector, to make any exchange or gift of, or to sell, mortgage or lease the whole or part of proprietary rights in land mentioned in the notice published under S. 11. By sub-s. (4) it is declared that a transfer made in contravention of the above provision shall be void. It is not disputed that on the date of execution of the deed of waqf Qazi Iftikhar Ahmad was subject to the disabilities imposed by sub-s. (3) inasmuch as the proceedings for the liquidation of his debts were still pending in the Court of the Sub Divisional Officer, Sitapur. It is contended on behalf of the appellant that a transfer by way of gift which is specifically prohibited by the sub-section is wide enough to cover the case of waqf alal-aulad. The respondents, on the other hand, maintain that Ex. A2 does not come within the prohibition.

[3] Qazi Iftikhar Ahmad, it would appear, conceived the idea of creating a waqf in respect of his property after he lost his only son in or about the year 1935. He postponed action till after the commencement of the liquidation proceedings under Chap. V, Encumbered Estates Act. In 1941 he applied to the Sub-Divisional Officer for sanction to transfer his property by waqf but his application was rejected because the liquidation officer considered that transfers by waqf were not included amongst the categories of transfers for the execution of which leave was required under sub-s. (3) of S. 7. The order is dated 15th October 1941. The deed, we have already mentioned, was executed on 17th October of the same year. The Qazi was anxious to safeguard the interest of the waqf, and he, therefore, applied again to the same officer and prayed that the Court might supplement its order of 15th October 1941, by adding that the scheme of the waqf did not embarrass the creditors and that it was not opposed to the spirit of rule 83 framed under the Act. The aforesaid rule was obviously mentioned by a clerical error for R. 84 which provides that before the completion of the liquidation scheme no sanction for transfer of property under sub-s. (3) of S. 7 should be given if it prejudices the interests of the creditors collectively or individually. The Qazi had in mind apparently the para. 3 of the deed of waqf whereby it was provided that the proceedings under the Encumbered Estates Act case were to continue in the normal way and that in place of the executant's name the name of waqf under his management would be substituted and the payment of all the debts found due in accordance with the decision of the Special Judge as well as the proceedings of the case would bind the wakf and the mutwallis.

[4] On the application of Qazi Iftikhar Ahmad the Liquidation Officer passed the following order on 4th November 1941, (Ex. A11):

"I have no objection to add the following to the order already passed by me on 15th October 1941. Sanction would not have embarrassed the condition on the liquidation scheme as it was not against the spirit of R. 83. But as it was a case of (paper punched) "wakf" no order of sanction passed nor necessary."

[5] The above proceedings of the Court of the Sub-Divisional Officer show unmistakably that the sanction for the execution of the waqf alal-aulad was refused. The reason for the refusal was not that it was liable to affect the creditors adversely but only that sub-s. (3) of S. 7 did not extend to a waqf alal-aulad. The respondents maintain that the effect of the two orders being to leave the landlord free to execute the projected deed they should be deemed to constitute sanction in case the sub-section on its true construction be held to render sanction necessary. The argument thus put is ingenious but is wholly against the intention or the tenor of the orders. On its face and in effect we must hold that no sanction was given by the Liquidation Officer.

[6] It is next urged on appellant's behalf that the waqf in question was at best a mere gift though a gift in trust, and that it must by force of sub-s. (4) be held to be void in the absence of permission. Reliance in this connection is placed upon the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in 19 O. C. 192[1] and of the Allahabad High Court in 51 ALL. 40.[2] Section 7, Encumbered Estates Act, did not fall to be considered in any of these cases. In 19 O. C. 192[1] their Lordships had to decide whether or not the word "gift" in S. 3, Avadh Laws Act, included a gift through the medium of a trust. The case related to a deed of trust which contained a settlement in favour of the executant's wife. The preamble recited that an agreement had been entered into between the settlor and his second wife Fatima to the effect that she would accept the provision made for her in satisfaction of her dower. The deed conveyed to the trustees the properties described in the schedule to the deed to hold them subject to certain mortgages and payment of certain annuities, cost of maintaining and managing the said properties and collecting their rents and to pay the income to the executant's second wife, Fatima, during her lifetime for her sole and separate use, subject to the cost of maintaining and educating her children. After her death the property was to be held in trust for all the aforesaid children living at the settlor's death, as tenants-in-common, in equal shares. In dealing with this document their Lordships observed that it was not possible to exclude a gift from the ambit of S. 3, Avadh Laws Act, merely because the donor's bounty passed to his intended beneficiary through the medium of a trust. In order that a conveyance may be impressed with the character of a gift it must fulfil the essential ingredients of that form of transfer. A gift under the Transfer of Property Act as well as under the Mahomedan law must be a transfer by one person in favour of another made voluntarily and without consideration and it must be accepted by and on behalf of the donee. Where the property is given to a beneficiary either directly or through a trustee the essential nature of the transaction remains the same. Where, however, the conveyance is in favour of God Almighty it would be difficult to put it at par with a gift in favour of a living beneficiary through the medium of a trust. It is not disputed that under the Hanafi Law the creation of a valid waqf divests the wakif of ownership with immediate effect and passes the property to God Almighty forthwith. A Sunni waqf contemplates a purely unilateral transaction and a declaration to constitute a waqf accompanied by delivery of possession would seem to be sufficient compliance with the requirements of law to effectuate an alienation: vide 11 Luck. 735.[3] In the case of a gift, on the other hand, it is essential that a donee should signify his assent to the declaration of gift and it is only on his accepting the gift and on the donor's effectively transferring possession to the donee that the transaction is complete — (vide Tayabji's Muhammadan Law, Ss. 345 and 346 and Baillie's Digest of Muhammadan Law, Vol. I, p. 515 et seq). The Privy Council case has, therefore, no relevancy.

[7] The Allahabad case referred to on appellant's behalf appears at first sight to support him but when it is realised that the case was governed by Shia Law it becomes difficult to apply it to the facts of the case before us. Under the Shia Law, a waqf alal-aulad is a contract and the property vests not in God Almighty but in the beneficiaries. A conveyance by a Shia Muslim by way of waqf may, therefore, in an appropriate case amount to a gift. The case was decided under the Bundelkhand Encumbered Estates Act of 1903. Section 10 (2) (a) of that enactment provided that until the proprietor ceased to be subject to the disabilities of the Act, he was incompetent "to exchange, give or without the consent of the Commissioner sell, mortgage or lease his proprietary rights in land or any part thereof." The waqf was made during the continuance of the disabilities imposed by the sub-section. The document recited that a part of the property was pledged and hypothecated to the creditors and the settler wished to make the waqf of the entire property therein described in favour of his male issues under the provisions of the Waqf Validating Act of 1913. After referring to the legal formula the mutwallis were named and it was provided that on the extinction of the line of the wakif's son, Hyder Husain Khan, a managing committee should be appointed to spend the income on religious and charitable purposes named in the subsequent paragraphs. The learned Judges of the Allahabad High Court held that the deed was inoperative in view of S. 10 (2) (a) of the Act and that the word "give" as used therein was not confined to the restricted sense, in which it was used in the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, but was intended to include dedication of property by way of waqf. Apart from the fact that the word "give" in the aforesaid section is of much wider amplitude than the word "gift" in sub-s. (3) of S. 7, Encumbered Estates Act, it is to be observed that the transfers named in the latter sub-section have a special technical meaning given to them by law. The import of the word "gift" cannot, in our judgment, be stretched so as to include all gratuitous transfers. Regard must be had to the question whether it is in favour of a donee who is capable of being regarded as a juristic person and therefore one who can signify his assent, or in favour of God Almighty who cannot be conceived of as such person or as capable of indicating acceptance. The waqf with which we are concerned does not fulfil the requirements of a gift and cannot, therefore, be regarded as such for the purposes of sub-s. (3) of S. 7, Encumbered Estates Act. Being in derogation of the ordinary law, it would seem obvious that the provision must be construed strictly. The language of the enactment restricts the prohibition to particular kinds of transfers and unless we seriously violate its scope we cannot permit the inclusion in it of conveyances which notwithstanding the family resemblance are regarded as distinct from those transfers in the eye of law. The view taken by the learned Sub-Divisional Officer in 1944 and the conclusion reached by the learned Civil Judge of Sitapur in the judgment under appeal appear to us to be justified and we overrule the appellant's plea regarding invalidity of EX. A2, for want of sanction.

[8] The only other point that remains to be disposed of relates to the objections on the ground of marzulmaut. The law on the point does not admit of doubt. As observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 34 I. A. 167[4] the doctrine applies to cases where the gift is made under pressure of a sense of imminence of death. The essential condition thus for its application is that there must be a subjective feeling in the mind of the patient that he is not going to recover; in other words there must be a proximate danger of death resulting subjectively in the preponderance of apprehension. These facts have to be proved like any other fact and may be evidenced by some external indicia in the patient's condition or his expressions and declarations. See 35 I. A. 67,[5] 7 Luck. 705,[6] 30 Bom. 537[7] and 49 Cal. 477.[8] In the case before us there is no evidence to prove the existence of such apprehension. It appears from the evidence of Dr. Rahmat Husain, P. W. 11, who treated him at the hospital and from the Bed-head ticket etc. that Qazi Iftikhar Ahmad suffered from a dangerous vulvular disease of the heart called Aortic Regurgitation and from Anaemia and Collitis. His troubles began shortly before he entered the Balrampur Hospital in September 1941. He complained of pain in his abdomen round about the umbelicus and it occasionally radiated towards the epigastrium. He also suffered from flatulence and occasional vomiting. He got 5 or 6 semi-formed stools every day and though there was a slight tension there was no mucus or blood and no griping. There was an increase in micturition and there was progressive weakness. These complaints, it would seem obvious, were not likely to engender in the mind of the patient any fear of death. There is no evidence that he was informed of the dangerousness of the disease. On the day of the execution of the deed of waqf, namely, 10-10-1941, the patient's blood pressure had risen. It was 200 sistolic and 80 diastolic. The pulse was 120. This may be attributable to the excitement and the worry which the importance of the step which he was taking was likely to entail. Be that as it may, the Qazi appears to have improved considerably when he left the hospital. Exhibit A-35 is the discharge certificate. It says that he was "relieved". There is evidence to the effect that the nature of the Qazi Iftikhar Ahmad's illness was such that when he was free from attack he was not likely to feel much out of the normal. According to the expert medical evidence, which in this case is copious, persons suffering from Aortic Regurgitation may live for 4 to 5 years though there is always a chance of their dying at any time. There is no evidence to show that the fatal possibilities of his malady were ever made known to the patient by his attendants. P. W. 12, Hakim Abdul Aziz, treated him last of all. In his opinion, the Qazi's malady consisted only of swelling of the liver and some heart trouble. The evidence of D. W. 7, Jalis Fatima, would further seem to indicate that Qazi had improved at least outwardly when he left the hospital. Qazi Iftikhar Ahmad performed the marriage of the witness a few days before he died and this circumstance is an indication of the fact that he did not think that his condition called for any special anxiety. The oral and documentary evidence to which the parties' learned counsel drew our attention has led us to the conclusion that the Qazi did not despair of his life at any time much less at the time when the deed of waqf was executed. We consider that the evidence of the plaintiff as P. W. 9 greatly exaggerates the case when he makes out that Qazi Iftikhar Ahmad's condition was known to be hopeless from the very commencement of his treatment in the hospital. The appellant's learned counsel says that since death in aortic regurgitation is more frequent than any other cardiac vulvular disease the patient must have been in apprehension that he will not survive. We have already said that there is no evidence that the dangerous aspect of the disease was brought to the consciousness of the wakif. The invalidity can be invoked only in cases of pressure of the sense of imminent death. The doctrine of marzulmaut has no application.

[9] There is no reason to interfere with the decision of the Court below. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. The stay order, dated 1-11-1944, is vacated.

B. K. Dhaon (for No. 1) and Virasat Hussain (for Nos. 2 and 3)—for Respondents.

Judgment.— In this case a preliminary objection has been raised on behalf of the respondents that this miscellaneous appeal is not maintainable. The contention raised is that the appeal is directed against an order passed by the lower appellate Court remanding the case to the trial Court by reversing the decision of that Court that it had no jurisdiction to decide the suit. The trial Court before whom the suit was originally filed remitted the two issues arising in respect of the tenancy to the Revenue Court. That Court returned the finding in favour of the plaintiffs-respondents. Before the third issue relating to the question of damages was determined, a plea was raised on behalf of the defendant-appellant that in view of the amened Tenancy Act the suit was not cognizable by the civil Court. This plea prevailed and the trial Court directed the return of the plaint for presentation to the proper Court under O. 7, R. 10, Civil P. C. The lower appellate Court in appeal has reversed that view and held that the Munsif had jurisdiction to try the suit. As the question of damages had been left undetermined, the case was remanded for disposal according to law. Treating this as an order of remand under R. 23 of O. 41, Civil P. C., the defendant-appellant has filed the present appeal under the provisions of O. 43, R. 1 (u), Civil P. C. Rule 23 contemplates a decree passed by the lower Court from which an appeal is preferred. The order passed by the lower Court however was not a decree but an order as distinguished from a decree. It is obvious therefore that the case does not fall under R. 23 of O. 41, and consequently no appeal is maintainable.

[2] This view is supported by a decision in A.I.R. 1942 Oudh 370[1] upon which reliance was placed by learned counsel for the respondents. There also a preliminary issue on the question of jurisdiction had been decided by the trial Court and the plaint was returned for presentation to the proper Court. The lower appellate Court having set aside that order and remanded the case to the trial Court for disposal according to law an appeal against the lower appellate Court's order was held to be an appeal against an interlocutory order which did not decide or terminate the suit and hence the order was not open to revision under S. 115, Civil P. C. A similar view was taken in 1944 O.A.C C. 122.[2] It is clear therefore that no appeal lies against the order of the lower appellate Court nor is that order open to revision under S. 115, Civil P. C.

[3] Learned counsel for the appellant has asked me to treat the appeal as a revision and relies upon a Full Bench decision of the Allahabad High Court in A. I. R. 1930 ALL. 713.[3] That was, however, a case in which the Full Bench did not consider whether the order of the lower appellate Court which was sought to be revised was an order which amounted to the decision of a case within the meaning of S. 115, Civil P. C. On the other hand, this Court has definitely held in the aforementioned cases that the order is not revisable in that it is interlocutory and does not amount to the decision of a case. Accordingly this appeal being unmaintainable, it is dismissed with costs.

[4] As the appeal has been dismissed, Civil Misc. Application NO. 1430 of 1947 for stay is also dismissed and the stay order dated 29-10-1947, passed thereon is hereby vacated.

L. Ambika Prasad and others — Plaintiffs — Appellants v. Town Area Committee, Bachhrawan and others—Defendants — Respondents.

First Appeal No. 69 of 1942, Decided on 29-10-1947, against decree of Civil Judge, Rae Bareli, D/- 30-4 1942.

Court-fees Act (1887), S. 7 (iv) proviso (U. P.) —Plaintiff collecting 'chungi and mahusul' in bazar as proprietor — Town Area Committee interfering with plaintiff's collection and recovering dues itself — Suit by plaintiff for declaration, for perpetual injunction and for damages — Relief held claimed with reference to immovable property and first proviso to S. 7 (iv) applied — Relief for declaration held did not require to be separately valued.

The plaintiff was the owner of all the land in a village in which a bazar was being held and had always been realising 'chungi and mahasul' in this bazar in exercise of his proprietary right. The Town Area Committee interfered with the collection of the plaintiff and itself began realising the dues which it called 'Tah Bazari.' The plaintiff brought a suit and claimed the following reliefs: (1) A declaration that the actions of the Committee were against law: (2) a perpetual injunction restraining the Committee for ever from realising dues in respect of the road and lane ('chungi wa mahsul sarak wa gali') of the Bazar and (3) Rs. 1800 as damages. The plaintiff paid a court-fee in respect of relief relating to damages, and also with respect to relief for injunction which also was valued at Rs. 1800. The relief for declaration was not separately valued. The suit was valued at Rs. 18,000 for the purposes of jurisdiction:

Held, that the relief claimed was with reference to immovable property and the first proviso to S. 7 (iv) was applicable. The relief with regard to declaration thus did not require to be separately valued and the court-fee paid was sufficient. [Para 6]

(A) That a declaration be made to the effect that the order issued by defendant 2 dated 28-6-1940, and the actions of the Town Area Committee, Bachrawan, are against the law.

(B) That a perpetual injunction be granted to the effect that defendant 2 and his officers are restrained from issuing such orders and the Town Area Committee, Bachrawan, and its officials, members and Chairman of the Panchayat be prohibited for ever from realising dues in respect of the road and lane ("chungi wa mahsul sarak wa gali") of Bazzar Girdharaganj in Bachrawan, pargana Bachrawan, district Rai Bareli.

(C) That Rs. 1800 as damages or any other sum deemed just by the Court may be directed to be paid by both the defendants or any of them.

[2] The suit was dismissed and the plaintiffs have appealed to this Court. They have paid a court-fee of Rs. 162/8/- in respect of the relief relating to damages. The correctness of this amount is not challenged. They have also paid a court-fee of Rs. 162/8 with respect to the relief for injunction which also was valued at Rs. 1800. The Chief Inspector of Stamps, U. P., has reported that this is incorrect and that, since the suit was valued at Rs. 18000, the proper valuation for the relief for declaration and injunction was Rs. 18,000 minus Rs. 1,800, (the value of the relief for damages), that is Rs. 16,200. He has accordingly reported that there is a deficiency of Rs. 832-8-0 in the court-fee which should be made good by the appellants.

[3] It appears that this report is due to a misapprehension. According to S. 7 (iv), amended Court-fees Act, which it is not disputed, applies to the present case, the court-fee is payable ad valorem on the 'amount at which the relief sought is valued in the plant.' The plaint claims three reliefs and gives the valuation of only two of them; it does not give any separate valuation of the relief for declaration. It, however, gives Rs. 18,000 as the valuation of the suit for the purposes of jurisdiction. In view of the provisions of S. 8, Court-fees Act, as amended for this Province, which provides that, in cases of this nature, the valuation for the purposes of jurisdiction shall be the same as for the purposes of court-fee, the learned Government Advocate argues that the valuation of the relief for declaration must be deemed to be Rs. 18,000 minus Rs. 3600 that is Rs. 14,400. He contends on the basis of the decision in 1944 A. L. J. 95,[1] that the court-fee must be paid on the sum total of the reliefs for declaration and injunction; that is on Rs. 16,200.

[4] This argument reverses the process laid down in S. 3, Suits Valuation Act; that section provides that the valuation for purposes of jurisdiction shall be the same as for the purposes of court-fee and not vice versa. The plaint definitely states that the valuation of the reliefs is Rs. 3600. This statement cannot be ignored and a higher valuation can be fixed upon the relief sought merely because the plaintiffs have made a mistake, a mistake which no longer affects jurisdiction having regard to S. 11, Suits Valuation Act, with regard to valuation for purposes of jurisdiction.

[5] The fact that no separate valuation is given of the relief for declaration does not affect the matter. This relief and the relief for declaration (injunction?) are part and parcel of one relief and only one valuation that of the consequential relief was required in this case: vide the first proviso to S. 7 (iv), Court-fees Act, as applicable to this Province. The learned Government Advocate contends that that proviso is not applicable because the injunction to restrain defendants 1 and 2 and their officers for collecting 'mahsul and chungi' is not a relief sought with reference to an immovable property, since the collection of a tax is quite independent of the ownership of any property and has no reference to it. Whatever force this argument might have had if the charges were in fact in the nature of a tax, it has no application to the facts of the present case, because a perusal of the plaint clearly indicates that the relief sought is with reference to immovable property. The relief claimed is with reference to the statement of the case contained in the plaint and cannot be read apart from it.

[6] Paragraph 2 of the plaint states that the plaintiffs are the owner of all the land in village Bachrawan, whether abadi or cultivated or uncultivated. In paras 3 and 4, it is stated that within the area of the village is an ancient Bazaar known as Girdharaganj Bazaar which has been, and is, under the control of the plaintiffs who look after its sanitation etc. Paragraphs 5 and 6 then state that the plaintiffs and their predecessors have always been realising 'chungi and mahsul' in this Bazar in the exercise of their proprietary right ('Bataur-i-haq milkiat') and this charge is in the nature of ground rent. In Paras 8 to 13 it is stated that the Town Area Committee has interfered in the collection of the plaintiffs and is itself realising the dues which it calls 'Tah Bazari.' Para 14 clearly states that this is unlawful interference in the proprietary rights ('haquq milkiat') of the plaintiffs. Then follow the formal paragraphs of the plaint those relating to the due giving of notice, array of parties, accrual of cause of action and valuation and then comes the relief paragraph in which the reliefs which we have already stated have been claimed. A consideration of these paragraphs leads to the conclusion that, in the present case, there is no claim with regard to any tax but only with regard to a levy based upon a claim to proprietary rights in the Bazaar and the side of the road. It is, therefore, a relief claimed with reference to immovable property and the first proviso to S. 7 (iv), Court-fees Act is applicable. The relief with regard to declaration thus did not require to be separately valued and the court-fee paid is sufficient. We hold accordingly.

B. Parbhu Narain Singh and others—Appellants v. B. Jitendra Mohan Singh and another—Respondents.

First Appeal No. 63 of 1941, Decided on 9-5-1947, against decree of Addl. Civil Judge, Fyzabad, D/- 31-5-1940.

(a) Interpretation of statutes — Retrospective effect—Vested rights.

It is not in accordance with sound principles of interpreting statutes to give them retrospective effect or in other words, it is a maxim that affirmative words in a statute without any negative expressed or implied do not take away existing rights : 26 All. 119 (P. C.) and 11 Beng. L. R. 115 (P. C.), Rel. on. [Para 23]

(b) Oudh Estates Act (U. P. Act, 1 [I] of 1869), S. 10—Operation of Act, if retrospective—Person entered in Lists dying before Act—Vested rights if divested—Enquiry whether any rights vested, if can be carried.

U.P. Act I of 1869 is given retrospective effect unless the effect of doing so would be to divest rights which had already vested in some person other than the person entitled to get them by virtue of the provisions of the Act and in case the Act is applicable, a conclusive presumption arises not only that the person entered in the lists is a Taluqdar but that the fact upon which his entry in the lists is based also exists, that is to say that the person entered was a Taluqdar to whom a primogeniture sanad was granted. The question whether there did in fact exist any sanad which governed succession to the deceased in 1862 i. e. before the Act can be considered. The presumption arising out of the entry in List III will not stand in the way of such an enquiry since this enquiry is directed to ascertain whether any rights are divested or not by the application of the Act or in other words, whether the Act has application to the case or not: Case law considered. [Para 33]

(c) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 6, R. 7—New case—Issue wide enough to cover new case set up by defendant — All record before Court—Plaintiff not taken by surprise— No prejudice — New case allowed to be set up.

Where the issue framed was sufficiently wide enough to cover a case set up by the defendant which was different from that pleaded in his written statement and all the documents relating to the case were before the Court so that no prejudice could have been caused to the plaintiffs:

Held, that the objection of the plaintiffs, that the new case set up by the defendant could not be allowed, must be overruled: 27 All. 634 (P. C.), Rel. on. [Paras 36 & 37]

(d) Evidence Act (1872), S. 35—Document kept with official record—Person preparing it not under duty—Extract of such document, held not admissible under S. 35 -- Oudh Estates Act (1 [I] of 1869), S. 33.

Where a certain document is an extract from a list prepared by or under the directions of a Maharaja for the purposes of assisting in the preparation of the lists under Act 1 [I] of 1869, but there was no duty imposed upon Maharaja to prepare such a list: he had merely to assist in revising the lists prepared by the Deputy Commissioners and he could not be expected to have personal knowledge of the claims of all the Taluqdars in Oudh and the list was prepared to assist him :

Held, that although that list was kept with the official records by the Board of Revenue (but as a separate file) it could not be treated as an official paper and consequently was not admissible under S. 35. [Para 73]

Held, however that the extract was admissible though not as official record, but as evidence of custom, under S. 33, Oudh Estates Act: 26 Cal. 81 (P. C.), Rel. on. [Para 74]

(e) Evidence Act (1872), Ss. 91 and 35—Proof of fact of grant of Sanad and proof of contents thereof —Proof of former—Admissibility of evidence other than Sanad—Admissibility under S. 35.

There is a distinction between proof of the terms of a contract or grant and proof of the fact that a grant was made or a contract was entered into. The fact of a grant as distinct from the terms of the grant can be proved by such evidence which is admissible as a copy of an entry in a public record. It is not necessary to prove it by production of the Sanad itself or by secondary evidence.

Assertion that a person was present at Durbar of 1859 and got a joint Sanad for Birhar Taluqdars can be corroborated from a remark made by some officer, either the Settlement Commissioner or some Assistant Settlement Officer that the names of the four Babus "are entered as proprietors in the Bihar Pargana Sunnad." 21 A. I. R. 1934 P. C. 157, 15 A.I R. 1928 Oudh 307, 35 A. I. R. 1948 Oudh 9, 2 A. I. R. 1915 Oudh 75, 4 A. I. R. 1917 Bom. 206 and 9 A. I. R. 1922 Pat. 222, Rel. on. [Paras 78 and 79]

Though the document above referred to was not written in the performance of an official duty and no enquiry as to whether there was a sanad or not was entrusted to the official who wrote it, yet it was his duty to ascertain under-proprietary rights, and the first step that he had to take in the performance of that duty was to ascertain how far the Taluqdar admitted those rights, and the letter was written to the Settlement Officer setting out the circumstances in which the enquiry was delayed and asking for further instructions and the object of mentioning a sanad was to show that while the persons who were classed by the rules as Taluqdars had been sent for, a fifth person had claimed to be interested and it was necessary to ascertain his rights before statements could be called for from the superior proprietors:

Held, that the statement contained in the letter was germane to his duties and was admissible as such under S. 35, Evidence Act. [Para 80]

(f) Evidence Act (1872), S. 35—Evidence of fact —Document is evidence of fact contained in it.

From the facts that enquiries were made from certain persons as to whether they desired sanads in the primogeniture form or not and the replies were sent by them and their names were thereafter inserted in the list of Taluqdars who desired primogeniture sanads are no doubt evidence of the fact that those persons were considered to be Taluqdars and enquiries were made from them with a view to grant them primogeniture sanads but this is no indication of the fact that Taluqdari sanads in the ordinary form had previously been granted to them. [Para 82]

(g) Oudh Estates Act (1 [I] of 1869)—Oudh Laws —Primogeniture Sanad—Date of grant—Proof.

The date of the sanad is no indication of the date on which it was actually given to the Taluqdar: 16 Cal. 397 (P. C.), Rel. on. [Para 85]

(h) Evidence Act (1872), S. 35 — Settlement orders and akhir Rubkars based on Sanad—Admissibility to show that sanad was granted to person named therein.

Orders of Settlement Courts and Rubkars akhir, containing a summary of all the proceedings, prepared and kept on the settlement files in accordance with directions of the Chief Commissioner, which indicate that claims were dismissed on the basis of the villages to which they related being covered by sanads, are admissible to show that a sanad was granted to the persons named therein : 15 A. I. R. 1928 Oudh 307; 35 A. I. R. 1948 Oudh 9 and 14 A. I. R. 1927 P. C. 8, Rel. on. [Para 89]

Further it is not necessary to prove on what enquiry these entries were based : 33 A. I. R. 1946 P. C. 103, Rel. on. [Para 89]

(i) Oudh Estates Act (1 [I] of 1869), S. 10, List III —Presumption under S. 10, when conclusive.

It is only when the Oudh Estates Act applies and not otherwise, that the presumption under S. 10, that a primogeniture Sanad has been granted to a person whose name has been entered in List III, is conclusive: 26 All. 119 (P. C.), Rel. on. [Paras 30 & 93]

There is no scope for any presumption as to the correctness of the entry by reason of the principle "Omina præsumuntur rite esse acta" where evidence is available establishing that no sanad of any kind was granted. [Para 93]

(j) Oudh Law — Primogeniture Sanad—Grant— When gives.

Grant of primogeniture Sanad to a Taluqdar who is not a sole successor of his predecessor-in-interest, in respect of properties of others would give no title to him. If he is the sole successor then Act 1 [I] of 1869 (Oudh Laws Act) would govern succession and whether he had or had not a sanad would be immaterial. [Para 95]

(k) Will—Construction—Rules of — Will of Taluqdar executed before Succession Act and Oudh Estates Act — Technicalities of rules of construction, if should be applied —Succession Act (1865), Ss. 82, 83, 85 and 88 to 98—Oudh Estates Act (1 [I] of 1869), Ss. 2 and 19 — Succession Act (1925), Ss. 95, 96, 98 and 100 to 111.

Where a document contended to be a will of a taluqdar was written when neither the Succession Act 10 [X] of 1865 nor the Oudh Estates Act, U. P. Act, 1 [I] of 1869, had been enacted and there were thus no particular rules applicable to the wills of Taluqdars, all that is necessary to ascertain is whether the document was meant by the executant to express his desires with regard to the devolution of his estate after his death. Absence of reference to his death in specific words is immaterial. [Para 103]

Answers given by deceased in reply to a circular No. 7/217 of 1860 to all Commissioners by the Chief Commissioner of Oudh, on 18th January 1860, expressing desires with regard to the devolution of his property held operated as a will and did not fail as a will on the ground that it only expressed executants' views as to custom and did not go further : 3 I. A. 259 (P. C.) ; 18 Cal. 1 (P. C.) and 25 A.I.R. 1938 P. C. 113, Rel. on ; 33 All. 344 (P. C.), Ref. [Paras 107 & 108]

(l) Succession Act (1925), S. 89—Succession Act (10 [X] of 1865), S. 76 — Will of taluqdar executed before 1869 —Applicability of S. 89—Oudh Estates Act (1 [I] of 1869), S. 19, Proviso 2.

Section 89, Succession Act (corresponding to S. 76 of Act 10 [X] of 1865) does not apply to the will of taluqdar executed before Act 1 [I] of 1869 (Oudh Estates Act), by virtue of S. 19, proviso 2 of Oudh Estates Act. But it does not mean that the principle contained in it is not applicable as a general principle of law. If the will is framed in such uncertain language that it is not possible to determine in whose favour it operates it must fail. Before, however, it can be allowed to fail every effort must be made to ascertain the legatee. [Para 109]

(m) Succession Act (1925), S. 81—Succession Act (10 [X] of 1865), S. 68 — Will of taluqdar executed before Oudh Estates Act (1 [I] of 1869)—Intention of testator—Exclusive evidence, admissibility.

It is only if all attempts to discover the intention of the testator fail that the heir at law will succeed: 9 Beng. L. R. 377 (P. C.), Ref.

Although it is the words of the will which are primarily to be considered to acertain the intention of the testator, his surroundings and the circumstances in which he came to execute the will may also legitimately be called in to assist in determining his meaning. Where the will of a taluqdar was executed before 1869 (before Oudh Estates Act), S. 81, Succession Act (corresponding to S. 68 of Act 10 [X] of 1865) cannot be applied. It is thus permissible to consider even extrinsic evidence to resolve a patent ambiguity : 3 I. A. 259 (P.C.),; 6 M. I. A. 526 (P. C.) and 25 A. I. R. 1938 P. C. 228, Rel. on. [Para 111]

(n) Oudh Estates Act (1 [I] of 1869), S. 14 — Applicability.

If a bequest was made not by the Taluqdar but by his heir before the commencement of Act 1 [I] of 1869 S. 14 would not operate to place the legatee in the same position as the testator : 27 All. 634 (P. C.), Expl. [Para 120]

(o) Oudh Estates Act (1 [1] of 1869), S. 22 — Applicability.

Held after considering the historical and other evidence that the succession was governed by the Act. [Para 122]

(p) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 6, R. 17—Pleadings as they stand in case must be taken.

Court must take the pleadings in the case as they stand and leave out of consideration the pleadings as they stood before the amendment: 17 A.I.R. 1930 P. C, 205, Applied. [Objection to new pleas was considered to be at too late a stage and was not allowed.] [Para 126]

(q) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 22, R. 3 — Statement made by party to suit is admissible against his legal representative.

Where the plaintiffs have come in only as the legal representative of another, any statements made by the latter are as much admissible against the plaintiff as they would have been against his predecessor, were he alive. [Para 127]

(r) Custom—Primogeniture — Oudh Estates — Proof—Onus—Paucity of divisions of estate during course of 25 years—Inference—Evidence Act (1872), Ss. 13, 101 to 103.

Burden of proof rests heavily upon those who prove custom (custom of single heir succession) which is at variance with ordinary rule and this burden cannot be discharged by production of ambiguous evidence. [Para 144]

Where utmost that could be said regarding single heir succession is that it might be due to custom, on the other hand, it might equally have been in accordance with law, such evidence is not sufficient to prove custom of single heir succession. In the absence of evidence to the contrary an inference as to single heir succession can be drawn from the paucity of division of the estate during the course of 25 generations. [Held on a consideration of all the evidence that the alleged custom of single heir succession had not been established] : Case law reviewed. [Paras 144, 161]

(s) Evidence Act (1872), Ss. 48, 49 and 32—Scope and applicability.

Statements of persons dead, made after the controversy had arisen are inadmissible under S. 32 (4). Sections 48 and 49 do not apply to such a case. These sections do not deal with the statements of dead persons or persons who cannot be found. Such cases are dealt with by S. 32: 12 A. I. R. 1925 P. C. 267, 18 A. I. R. 1931 Oudh 89, 26 A. I. R. 1939 P. C. 22 and 23 All. 37 (P. C.), Disting. [Para 154]

(t) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 6, R. 1—Pleading undergoing various changes—Value of.

Where the pleadings of the parties had undergone a change during the course of the suit, held no importance could attached to them: 25 A. I. R. 1938 P. C. 189, Rel. on. [Para 163]

(u) Hindu Law—Joint family—Separation—Tests —Conduct of parties is real guide.

Generally speaking, the normal condition of every Hindu family is joint. Presumably every such family is joint in food, worship and estate. In the absence of proof of division such is the legal presumption. Separation from commensality and joint worship does not necessarily effect a division of a joint undivided Hindu family. Such a separation may be due to various causes, and the family yet continues joint in estate: To constitute separation there must be a clear and unambiguous declaration by a member of his intention to separate himself from the family. It is not necessary that all the parties should agree to a separation: the status of the plaintiff as separate in estate is brought about by his assertion of his right to separate. It is by no means a rare thing that a person makes a statement that he is a member of a joint family with his relative, but has reasons of his own for making that statement. It is not his statement but his actings and dealings with the estate, which furnish a true guide to the determination of the question of the jointness. There can be a partition of the joint property without an actual division of the property by metes and bounds. If one member separates there is no presumption either that all have separated or that the others have remained joint. This must be proved like any other fact. Property may be co-parcenary with regard to some members but the other members of the family may have no interest in it : Case law relied on. [Paras 165—168]

(v) Hindu Law—Joint family—Exclusion of member—What constitutes—Adverse possession—Limitation Act (1908), Art. 127.

As to what amounts to exclusion of a member of a joint Hindu family from enjoyment of joint property depends upon the facts of each particular case but an intention to exclude is essential: 16 A. I. R. 1929 P. C. 231, Ref. [Para 170]

Held, on evidence that there was exclusion : 2 A. L. J. 225 and 18 Cal. 341 (P. C.), Disting. [Paras 179, 186]

Annotation:—('42-Com) Limitation Act, Art. 127 N. 11.

(w) Hindu Law—Joint family—Acquisition—Self-acquisition—Presumption.

In the case of an ordinary Hindu family possessed of joint property, it would be presumed that the acquisitions of movable property by a member would also be joint property, but when the member derived a very large income from his exclusive property and only a small income from the joint family property, it cannot be presumed that the movable property was acquired from one source or the other or that it was ancestral and not self-acquired : 11 Cal. 777 (P. C.), Rel. on. [Para 171]

(x) Evidence Act (1872), S. 91—Secondary evidence.

In the absence of an entry in the list under Oudh Estates Act, the fact that the villages were taluqdari is capable of proof by the production of other evidence i.e., the Rubkhar Akhin and the wajib-ul-arz : 15 A I.R. 1928 Oudh 307, Rel. on. [Para 188]

Judgment. — The suit out of which this appeal arises relates to the property described in various lists given in schedule B and commonly known as Taluqa Haswar. Babu Narendra Bahadur Singh the last person in possession of the Taluqa, died issueless on 4-2-1936. List A of schedule B comprises by far the most valuable portion of the estate, namely, the villages situated in the Fyzabad district. In lists B to D are entered shares in villages situated in the Azamgarh, Basti and Gorakhpur districts (i. e., properties outside Oudh). Lists E, F, H and J give the movable properties: list G is a list of papers and documents and list I is a list of house properties.

[2] The original plaintiff, Babu Jai Narain Singh, was a brother of Babu Narendra Bahadur Singh. On his death on 12-1-1938, his three sons appellants 1 to 3 were substituted as plaintiffs by an order, dated 3-8-1938.

[3] Defendant 1 is Babu Jitendra Mohan Singh, the eldest son of Babu Inder Bikram Singh, a younger brother of Babu Narendra Bahadur Singh who predeceased him. It is agreed that Babu Inder Bikram Singh was older than Babu Jai Narain Singh. Rajendra Mohan Singh, the younger son of Inder Bikram Singh, is not a party to the suit. Defendant 2, Thakurain Bind Basni Kunwar, is the widow of Babu Narendra Bahadur Singh.

[4] During the pendency of the appeal in this Court the three plaintiffs appellants being unable to provide funds for the prosecution of the appeal, sold a portion of their rights to Kunwar Rabi Indra Bahadur Singh, who has now been impleaded as appellant 4.

[5] The suit was filed in this Court on its original side. Later on, this Court ceasing to possess ordinary original civil jurisdiction, the suit was transferred to the Court of the Additional Civil Judge of Fyzabad and he has disposed of it by the judgment under appeal.

[6] In order to elucidate the pleas of the parties and the facts of the case it is necessary to give a pedigree of the family Since one of the principal questions which we will have to decide is whether an alleged custom of single heir succession has been established the pedigree which we give below is much fuller than that given by the trial Court. This pedigree is no longer in dispute though the learned counsel for respondent 1 contends that it is not complete.

[7] The ancient history of the family, resting, as it does, upon tradition, is somewhat confused but, so far as it can be gathered from EX. A-20 and the Fyzabad Settlement Report, it is as follows :

Patraj Deo was the first ancestor of the family to migrate, about 700 years ago, to Fyzabad where he settled down in village Rannupur, pargana Surhurpur. He was Sombasi Thakur but since the place of his origin was Pali, about the locality of which there is some uncertainty, his descendants came to be known as "Palwars." The tradition goes that Patraj Deo took service under the Rajbhars, who then ruled in this part of the country, and he attained to a considerable position under them, being entrusted with the management of 96 villages constituting tappas Tardi and Khurka. During his time the Bhars ceased to rule and Patraj Deo engaged for the revenue of those 96 villages with the Muslim Government established at Delhi. He is said to have acquired later parganas Kauria, Tilheni, Ahraula and Dadar-Kariat, in the Azamgarh district.

[8] The Settlement report states that Patraj Deo had two legitimate sons, Bheem Deo and Bharat Deo (the latter is shown in EX. A-20 not as the son of Patraj Deo but as being eighth in descent from him), a son from the daughter of a fairy, Har Har Deo, and some illegitimate sons. The eldest, Bheem Deo, became a hermit. The second son obtained parganas Kauria and Tilheni (in district Azamgarh) : Har Har Deo got tappas Tardi and Khurka in pargana Surhurpur, district Fyzabad, where his descendants still hold several estates, including two Taluqas Tigra and Murerah. The rest of Patraj Deo's property, went to his illegitimate offspring whose descendants still flourish in the Azamgarh district.

[9] The tradition proceeds that, about 120 years later, Gohraj Deo, ninth in descent from Patraj Deo, left his ancestral home in Azamgarh and migrated to pargana Birhar, district Fyzabad, where he took up his residence in village Pokarbhita. It is said about him also that he took service with the Bhars, though this is inaccurate because the Bhars had ceased to rule much earlier, and that he himself, or he and his descendants acquired tappas Sati, Barohi and Haveli comprising 302 villages. About 360 years ago, Bali Ram and Mani Ram, the two sons of Rahman Sah divided the estate between them, half and half. If the chronology is correct, this would probably be in the reign of the Emperor Akbar. Later, there was a division between Ain Singh and Lashkar Singh. It is said that this was about 150 years after the partition between Bali Ram and Mani Ram but that period of time cannot have elapsed between the two partitions because Ain and Lashkar were the grandsons of Bali Ram and cannot have lived so long after him.

[10] About 150 years after the division between their ancestors, i. e. about the time of the death of the Emperor Aurangzeb when disorders had commenced it seems that the descendants of Maniram were ousted from all but a few villages, which they continued to hold till the annexation, and the descendants of Bali Ram again entered into possession of this property also. The various members of the family continued to possess the property till in 1261 Fasli (1854) Madho Prasad Singh and his brother, Kishen Prasad, divided the property of Ain Singh's branch between them. The property of Lashkar Singh's branch was also held by two persons, Sheo Prakash Singh and Mahip Narain Singh. At the time of the second summary settlement the estates in the possession of these four persons were settled with them and later when Act 1[I] of 1869 was passed the names of them all were entered in lists I and III of the lists prepared under S. 8 of the Act. The estate shown against them all is Birhar.

[11] Although Babu Madho Prasad Singh had died in 1862 before the Act was passed his name is entered in lists I and III at Nos. 142 and 57 respectively. The questions as to whether he got a sanad, and if so, what its nature was are questions which arise in this appeal and must be decided. It is also a point in dispute whether Madho Prasad Singh's eldest son, Har Dutt Singh alone or all his three sons succeeded him It is not disputed that Suraj Bali Singh the youngest son died issueless, probably when still quite young. It is also not disputed that Gopal Saran Singh and his heirs are not in possession of any of the Oudh properties appertaining to Taluqa Haswar, though the parties do not agree as to whether they never succeeded or whether for some reason or other, they were subsequently excluded. They are no parties to this litigation and anything that we might say in the course of this judgment will not affect any rights which they may have. Har Dutt Singh died in about 1892 and Babu Narendra Bahadur Singh entered into possession of the property of which he had been in possession.

[12] On the death of Babu Narendra Bahadur Singh, the usual disputes arose as to the mutation of names, Jai Narain Singh, Jitendra Mohan Singh and Thakurain Bind Basni Kunwar being the rival claimants. On 28th October 1936 the Sub-Divisional Officer of Tanda district Fyzabad, ordered mutation in favour of Babu Jai Narain Singh who thereupon obtained possession of all the immovable property. The order was, however, set aside in appeal by the Deputy Commissioner, Fyzabad, on 12th June 1937 and mutation was ordered in favour of Babu Jitendra Mohan Singh. This order was upheld by the Commissioner of Fyzabad on 3rd July 1937.

[13] On 6th July 1937 Babu Jai Narain Singh instituted the suit out of which this appeal arises for a declaration of his title to the entire property. He died on 12th January 1938 and as already stated, his three sons were brought on the record as plaintiffs.

[14] On 27th September 1938 the substituted plaintiffs applied for permission to amend the plaint. This permission was granted and the amendments were made. It is not necessary at this stage to give the case originally set up by Babu Jai Narain Singh or by this amendment because the new plaintiffs considerably changed their position again in the course of their oral pleadings. The case finally taken up by them was that Madho Prasad Singh was the absolute owner of the property since he alone obtained it after the confiscation effected by Lord Canning's Proclamation, but that on his death it descended, according to Hindu Law unchanged by any custom on all his descendants then in existence and it has been governed by the Hindu Law ever since. It was pleaded that, as laid down in 31 I. A. 30,[1] the entry of Babu Madho Prasad Singh's name in lists I and III prepared under S. 8 of Act 1 [I] of 1869 cannot affect the rights of persons who had already acquired them before the Act was passed. The plaintiffs also pleaded that Babu Jai Narain Singh was the preferential heir under Act 1 [I] of 1869 and that, in any case, all the property was not governed by that Act.

[15] Defendant 1 pleaded that Madho Prasad Singh received, jointly with the other three Birhar Taluqdars, a Taluqdari and later a primogeniture sanad for all the property of which the second summary settlement had been made with him, and that the death of Babu Madho Prasad Singh before the passing of Act 1 [I] of 1869 makes no difference to his status and his rights. It was also pleaded that there was a custom of single heir succession according to the rule of male lineal primogeniture prevailing in this family and that Babu Madho Prasad Singh had made a will in favour of Har Dutt Singh, so that the latter alone succeeded to all the property left by his father. This defendant further alleged that all the other members of the family had accepted the sole title of Har Dutt Singh so that in any case, when Act 1 [I] of 1869 was passed he was the sole person having title and the effect of applying Act 1 [I] of 1869 retrospectively would not be to divest any rights. In any case, it was pleaded, Babu Har Dutt Singh and the other three Birhar Taluqdars, obtained fresh primogeniture sanads in 1873 and those operated as Government grants which regulate succession to the estate left by them. Thus, on the death of Babu Har Dutt Singh in 1892, his eldest son, Narendra Bahadur Singh alone succeeded to all the properties left by him (a) under Act 1 [I] of 1869, (b) the joint primogeniture sanad, (c) family custom of single heir succession according to the rule of male lineal primogeniture, (d) according to the sanad of 1873 and (e) as the senior-most person entitled under the custom of impartibility. Defendant 1 claimed exclusive title in himself on the same grounds (except the last) and he claimed non-taluqdari property under the custom of single heir succession according to the rule of male lineal primogeniture by virtue of which females were excluded from inheritance. In oral pleadings he added that, in any case, Babu Jai Narain Singh had separated from Babu Narendra Bahadur Singh while he himself and his father had remained joint and that consequently Jai Narain Singh could not succeed in preference to him.

[16] Defendant 2 denied that the second summary settlement of any of the properties had been made with Babu Madho Prasad Singh or that his property was governed by Act 1 [I] of 1869 or any sanad. She also denied that Narendra Bahadur Singh was a member of a joint family it being alleged that he had separated both from Jai Narain Singh and Inder Bikram Singh in 1892 or, at any rate, in 1935. She claimed title in herself on the death of Narendra Bahadur Singh as his widow. She pleaded that, at any rate, so far as the movables and the other property found to be non-taluqdari were concerned, she alone was entitled to succeed. She further, pleaded that, during mutation proceedings, there had been a settlement between her and defendant 1 which was binding on both of them and that she was entitled to the property assigned to her by that settlement; but, if defendant 1 could lawfully resile from that settlement, then she alone should get all the property, movable and immovable, left by her deceased husband.

[17] Upon the pleadings of the parties Hamilton J. framed the following issues :

"1. Was all or any of the immovable property in suit ancestral property of a joint Hindu family on the death of Madho Prasad Singh?

2. Was all or any of the immovable property in suit, property subject to -

(1) a custom of male lineal primogeniture,

(2) a taluqdari sanad,

(3) a primogeniture sanad in the name of Madho Prasad Singh and three others,

(4) a subsequent primogeniture sanad in the name of Har Dutt Singh and

(5) the Oudh Estates Act and amending Act

(a) because of a declaration having the force of a will alleged to have been made by Madho Prasad Singh in favour of Har Dutt Singh,

(b) because of the entry of the name of Madho Prasad Singh in lists I and III prepared under the Oudh Estates Act, and

(c) because Har Dutt Singh was the heir of Madho Prasad Singh before the Act came into force.

3. If there was a joint Hindu family holding ancestral property were either Inder Bikram Singh or Jai Narain Singh or both and their descendants excluded ?

(a) by partition by consent between Narendra Bahadur Singh and them, and

(b) by Narendra Bahadur Singh depriving them of their rights for more than 12 years ?

4. If Madho Prasad Singh was not a Taluqdar did the estate nevertheless pass absolutely to Har Dutt Singh by virtue of the will alleged to have been executed by Madho Prasad Singh in his favour ?

5. Did the exclusion of Gopal Saran Singh result in the application of the Oudh Estates Act to the estate then in the possession of Har Dutt Singh ?

6. Was Babu Jai Narain Singh born in 1868 and did he by birth acquire an interest in the movable and immovable property in suit which could not be divested by Act 1 [I] of 1869 or otherwise ?

7. Were Babu Jai Narain Singh and the plaintiffs members of a joint Hindu family with the late Babu Narendra Bahadur Singh and was all or any of property in suit movable and immovable ancestral joint family property of Babu Jai Narain, the plaintiffs and Babu Narendra Bahadur Singh at the time of the latter's death ?

8. Are the plaintiffs not entiled to the movable property because succession thereto on the deaths of Madho Prasad Singh, Har Dutt Singh and Narendra Bahadur Singh was governed by the custom of single heir succession as alleged by defendant 1 ?

9. In view of the decisions of the preceding issues to what relief, if any, are any or all of the plaintiffs entitled as regards (1) landed property, (2) houses, and (3) movable property."

[18] After the issues had been framed the suit was transferred to the Additional Civil Judge, Fyzabad who disposed of it by a long and elaborate judgment, dated 31st May 1940. Some of his findings are somewhat confused and inconsistent but his principal findings are as follows :

"1. That the second summary settlement was made with Madho Prasad Singh in respect of the property entered in Ex. A-2 separately from the other Birhar Taluqdars and he executed a separate kabuliat. By reason of the Governor-General's letter of 10th October, 1859, he became the sole and absolute proprietor of this property and must be considered to be a Taluqdar within the meaning of Act 1 [I] of 1869.

2. That Kishen Prasad Singh attended the Governor-General's Darbar on 26th October 1859, on behalf of the four Birhar Taluqdars and received a Taluqdari sanad on their behalf.

3. That this sanad was subsequently revised on 9th November 1860, by the addition of a clause providing for succession according to the rule of primogeniture.

4. That the question of granting a separate sanad to each of the four Birhar Taluqdars, as distinct from their conjoint sanad was under the consideration of the authorities from before November, 1860, and the sanads were acually granted in 1873.

5. That, by reason of the entry of the name of Babu Madho Prasad Singh in list III, there is a presumption that a primogeniture sanad was granted to him although the presumption may be rebutted.

6. That, in the present case the presumption arising from entry in list III has not been rebutted and it has not been shown that the entry was made by mistake.

7. That on the death of Madho Prasad Singh, Har Dutt Singh alone succeeded to the estate and Gopal Saran Singh and Suraj Bali Singh did not get any share.

8. That, by reason of the application of the Act, the sanad and the custom of single heir succession, there was no joint family property.

9. That, if there was any such joint family then Inder Bikram Singh, Jai Narain Singh and their descendants were not excluded by Narendra Bahadur Singh.

10. That the plaintiffs had themselves set up a custom of impartibility and defendant 1 had only to prove that succession was according to the rule of primogeniture.

11. That the course of devolution for over 700 years proves that the estates always descended to a single heir and whenever there was any departure from this rule it was due to extraneous causes and was not in recognition of any right existing in others.

12. That the custom of single heir succession according to the rule of male lineal primogeniture is proved.

13. That, in spite of the fact that his name is not mentioned in it, Ex. A-8 operates as a will in favour of Har Dutt Singh.

14. That even if unamended Act 1 [I] of 1869 did not apply, Act 3 [III] of 1910 made it applicable.

15. That Madho Prasad Singh's name having already been entered in the joint sanad, the sanad in favour of Har Dutt Singh, Ex. A-126 did not have the effect of depriving any one of title and consequently, the whole title being vested in him, it was open to Har Dutt Singh to surrender his estate and accept it under new conditions relating to succession.

16. That out of the property entered in list A of schedule B, villages Bhitaura, Bhagwanpur, Manjharia, Parsauli, Chak Makraha, Rasulpur Dargah and Paharpur are not Taluqdari but all the 'Manjhas' entered in list "A" must go with the villages to which they appertain."

[19] As a result of these findings the learned Additional Civil Judge held that none of the plaintiffs was entitled to claim any share of the property left by Narendra Bahadur Singh and dismissed the suit. The plaintiffs have come up in appeal and they, and respondent 2, contend that no portion of the property is governed by Act 1 [I] of 1869 or by any custom of single heir succession. The appellants claim half the property to the exclusion of respondent 2, the widow, on the ground that Narendra Bahadur Singh was a member of a joint Hindu family while respondent 2 claims that Narendra Bahadur Singh died as a separated member and she alone is entitled to the property left by him.

[20] The appellants' learned counsel supports his contention that the Act does not apply on two grounds:—(a) that Madho Prasad Singh did not in fact receive a primogeniture sanad and the entry of his name in list III is ultra vires; and (b) in any case the effect of applying the Act in this particular case would be to divest Gopal Saran Singh, Suraj Bali Singh and other members of the family of rights which they had acquired on the death of Madho Prasad Singh in 1862 and this cannot be allowed.

[21] The learned counsel for respondent 1 on the other hand contends that the Act has retrospective effect even if it does divest rights and secondly that in the present case no rights are divested because Har Dutt Singh alone the heir under Act 1 [I] of 1869, had succeeded to Madho Prasad Singh under: (a) a primogeniture sanad governing succession; (b) a will executed by Madho Prasad Singh in his favour; and (c) a custom of lineal primogeniture prevailing in the family.

[22] In view of these contentions, the first thing which we are called upon to determine is whether Act 1 [I] of 1869 can be given retrospective operation so as to govern the property left by Madho Prasad Singh, even if the effect of this would be to divest rights which had already vested.

[23] The general rule is that "it is not, however, in accordance with sound principles of interpreting statutes to give them retrospective effect" vide 31 I. A. 30[3] at p. 37 or in other words :

"It is a maxim that affirmative words in a statute without any negative expressed or implied do not take away existing rights :" vide 1 I. A. 282[2] at p. 306.

What has, therefore, to be determined is whether there is anything in Act I of 1869 which takes it out of this general rule and gives it retrospective effect.

[24] The first case which has an important bearing on this point is the Maurawan case, 3 I. A. 259.[3] There the estate of one Chandan Lal had been exempted by the Proclamation of Lord Canning from confiscation but since he had died before the Proclamation was issued, it was held that the name of Chandan Lal was used as a generic term to denote the joint family composed of his descendants. The summary settlement of this property was, however, made only with one of his sons, Gauri Shankar, and a sanad was granted to him. Gauri Shankar died before the Act was passed but, after the Act had come into force, his sons claimed the whole property as belonging to their father. Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee said (at pp. 269-270) :

"As regards, therefore, the estates which were exempted from confiscation, the sunnud and summary settlements were a mere grant by Government to one member of the family of property which belonged to the family jointly. They could not of themselves affect the rights of the family."

Their Lordships then proceed, on page 271, to consider the effect of the Act upon the rights of the parties and they say that, since summary settlements were made with Gauri Shankar between the dates specified in S. 3, and a talookdari sunnud was granted to him before the passing of the Act, he must

"in consequence of the Act, be deemed to have acquired a permanant, heritable and transferable right in the estates to which the suit relates."

Their Lordships proceeded further and held that though Gauri Shankar had died in 1865 before the Act was passed he possessed a power of alienation by virtue of Ss. 11, 14 and 15 of the Act and that he had exercised this power in favour of the joint family. Thus, in the result, although the rights of the joint family were held to have ceased by reason of the Act, they were also held to have been restored to it by reason of the action of Gauri Shankar under the Act, and the position was the same as if no retrospective effect had been given to the Act.

[25] The next case to which we will refer is that in 4 I. A. 178.[4] The suit was commenced in August 1865 against Jawahir Singh, whose name was subsequently entered in the lists prepared under S. 8 for a share of Taluqa Basaidih, the summary settlement in respect of which had been made with him and a sanad had been granted to him. The suit remained pending till 1869 when, besides the letter of 10th October, 1859, Act I of 1869 was also pleaded as a bar. This plea was accepted by the Settlement Officer. In appeal their Lordships of the Judicial Committee, after commenting adversely on the irregularity of the proceedings of the Settlement Officer in not deciding the case earlier, say, at page 192 :

"If the Settlement Officer had acted at once upon his own judgment, instead of referring for instructions or orders, the probability is that his judgment would have been given before Act 1[I] of 1869 was passed, and in that case he might have come to a different conclusion. Be that as it may, their Lordships must deal with the case as they now find it. The question is : Is the plaintiff entitled to any and what share or beneficial interest in the estate, or is his claim barred by Act No. 1[I] of 1869 ?"

Upon this point their Lordships held that, by reason of the Act, Jawahir Singh had become the absolute owner but they further held that he could by reason of the provisions of the Act, have transferred a beneficial interest to Hardeo Bux Singh and others and consequently the case was remitted to the Courts in India for a determination of the question whether he had done so. Thus in this case again, though their Lordships gave retrospective effect to the Act, the same result would have followed by accepting the letter of 10th October 1859, as conferring title upon sanad-holding Taluqdars, as has been done in so many other cases.

[26] The two cases to which we have just referred appear to support the argument of the learned counsel for respondent 1 but, in subsequent cases, their Lordships of Judicial Committee have not accepted the proposition that these cases in fact held that Act I of 1869 applies retrospectively so as to divest vested rights.

[27] In 31 I. A. 30[1] the name of Murtaza Bakhsh who had died in 1865, admittedly without having received a sanad of any sort was entered in lists I and III prepared under S. 8 of Act 1[I] of 1869. After the death of his widows, a contest arose between his heirs if Act 1 [I] of 1869 had been in force at the time of his death and the successors of the persons who claimed to have succeeded on the basis that the Act was not applicable. The Subordinate Judge held that the entry of Murtaza Bukhsh's name in the lists was ultra vires and of no effect, that Murtaza's mother on succeeding to the estate held it as absolute owner that, on the mother's death, the two widows held equal halves as absolute owners and that on their death the estates descended to their heirs under the Islamic Law. On appeal the Judicial Commissioners upheld this decision and on further appeal their Lordships of the Judicial Committee say :

"Their Lordships have no hesitation in affirming it. The whole case turns on the entry of Murtaza Bakhsh's name in two of the lists ordered to be made by the Act of 1869. Section 10 of the Act compels the Courts to regard such lists as conclusive evidence that the persons named therein are taluqdars or grantees within the meaning of the Act. When the lists referred to are looked at, it will be found that there are six lists : See S. 8. Murtaza Bakhsh's name is in the first and third. The entries, therefore, by Ss. 8 and 10 are conclusive evidence (1) that he is to be considered as having been a taluqdar within the meaning of the Act: see Ss 2, 8, list I; and (2) that he was a taluqdar to whom a sanad had been made declaring that the succession to the estates comprised in it should be regulated by the rule of primogeniture: see Ss. 2, 8, list 3. These enactments are clear and peremptory, and would be decisive if they applied to this case.

It is not, however, in accordance with sound principles of interpreting statutes to give them a retrospective effect. The Court cannot construe Ss. 8 and 10 so as to deprive the successors of the estates of a person who had died before those sections came into operation of rights which they acquired on his death. Entries of the names of deceased persons in the lists mentioned in S. 8 do not appear to have been contemplated by the Act, but such entries have no doubt been made and they are practically harmless if the names were already in former lists made under the Order in Council, or if the entries do not alter the previously acquired rights of any one. This was the case in 11 I. A. 51.[5] But no decision has been referred to which supports the contention that the entry of the name of a person who died before the Act came into force can divest rights previously acquired on his death. In this case the death occurred in 1865, and the successors then acquired their right under the ordinary Mahomedan law. The Oudh Estates Act did not come into operation until 1869; and to construe its provisions as altering the succession would be not only unjust but plainly contrary to well-settled legal principles."

[28] The report of the arguments shows that the case in 3 I. A. 259[3] was placed before their Lordships and yet their Lordships say :

"But no decision has been referred to which supports the contention that the entry of the name of a person who died before the Act came into force can divest rights previously acquired on his death."

Thus this case is clear authority for the proposition that Act 1 [I] of 1869 will have retrospective operation if it does not have the effect of divesting rights which had already vested, although it will have no retrospective effect if there is divesting. The distinction drawn in this case has subsequently been maintained : vide 60 I. A. 103[6] at p. 111 and 65 I. A. 137.[7]

[29] There are other cases too in which although the person whose name appeared in the lists prepared under S. 8 had died before the commencement of the Act, it was held that the Act continued to govern succession to the property: vide 11 I. A. 51,[5] 20 I. A. 77[8] and 1935 O. W. N. 178[9] at p. 181. The view of their Lordships was very clearly stated in 43 I. A. 269[10] at pp. 276-277 in the following words :

"As already observed, a summary settlement of the Government revenue had been made with Jamshed Ali Khan on 22nd Jaunary 1859, a taluqdari sanad had been granted to him on 17th October 1861, and his name was entered as a taluqdar in the first of the lists. He had acquired, as declared by S. 3, 'a permanent heritable and transferable right' in his estate and was unquestionably a taluqdar within the meaning of the Act. His death before the Act was passed into law makes no difference in his status or in his right."

Their Lordships not only held succession to be governed by the Act but also raised the presumption as to a custom of single heir succession on the basis of an entry in list II.

[30] Basing himself on some remarks of the Judicial Committee in 31 I. A. 30[1] contained in the passage we have quoted the learned counsel for the appellants contended that the entry of the name of a person who had obtained no primogeniture sanad in list III prepared under S. 8 was ultra vires. Those remarks cannot be read apart from the context and the rest of the report shows that in spite of the fact that it was agreed that a sanad had been refused in that case, their Lordships would have considered themselves bound to presume the grant of a primogeniture sanad if the Act had in fact applied to the case. They say :

"The entries, therefore, by Ss. 8 and 10 are conclusive evidence (1) that he is to be considered as having been a taluqdar within the meaning of the Act: see Ss. 2, 8, list I; and (2) that he was a taluqdar to whom a sanad had been made declaring that the succession to the estates comprised in it should be regulated by the rule of primogeniture; see Ss. 2, 8, list 3. These enactments are clear and peremptory, and would be decisive if they applied to this case." : see 31 I. A. 30[1] at pp. 36-37.

[31] Reliance was also placed upon 16 I. A. 71[11] and 54 I. A. 5.[12] In the former case the name of the father to whom a primogeniture sanad had been granted and who had died before Act 1 [I] of 1869 was passed was entered although the summary settlement had been made with the sons, who had originally received the sanad. Thus even if the father, Dariao, was assumed to be a Taluqdar, there would be no property of which he would be owner and the entry of his name in lists prepared under the Act would have no practical result. It was in these circumstances that their Lordships said that they would attach no importance to the proceedings by which the name of Dariao was entered in the lists. In the second case mentioned, in view of the words of S. 10 and of other decisions of their Lordships to which we will hereafter refer, we are constrained to hold that their Lordships, when they say : "In the absence of any evidence to show that Bhagwant's name was wrongly inserted in list III his inclusion in that list is ..... conclusive evidence that the sanad he obtained was a primogeniture grant," had in mind a case of the nature of 16 I. A. 71.[11]

[32] We have already pointed out that their Lordships held in 31 I. A. 30[1] which was a case relating to an entry in list III, that the entry in the lists prepared under S. 8 Act 1 [I] of 1869 is conclusive evidence if the Act applies. In 43 I. A. 269[10] at p. 280, in which case also the person entered in the lists had died before the Act 1 [I] of 1869 was passed, their Lordships say :

"This does not mean that they shall be conclusive merely as to the fact that the persons entered therein are taluqdars as defined in S. 2. In their Lordships' opinion the provision of S. 10 goes much further; it means that the Courts shall regard the insertion of the names in these lists as 'conclusive evidence' of the fact on which is based the status assigned to the persons named in the different lists. For example, in list 2 such Taluqdars alone are included whose estate, according to the custom of the family 'on and before 13th February 1856' (the date of the first annexation of Oudh), 'ordinarily descended upon a single heir.' their title to have their names inserted in that list is based on the specific family custom set out in the section. Under S. 10 the Courts are bound by the statute to regard as conclusive the fact that there was such a pre-existing custom attaching to these estates on which their inclusion in list 2 was based."

In the same way in the case of an estate entered in list III if the Act is applicable, the Courts must presume that a primogeniture sanad had been granted and it is not open to them to hold that the entry was ultra vires. See also 26 I A. 194,[13] 55 I. A. 303[14] and 59 I. A. 1[16] at p. 6 which were all cases relating to list II estates.

[33] A consideration of the decisions of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee leads us to the conclusion that Act 1 [I] of 1869 is given retrospective effect unless the effect of doing so would be to divest rights which had already vested in some person other than the person entitled to get them by virtue of the provisions of Act 1 [I] of 1869 and that, in case the Act is applicable, a conclusive presumption arises not only that the person entered in the lists is a Taluqdar but that the fact upon which his entry in the lists is based also exists that is to say in this case that Madho Prasad Singh was a Taluqdar to whom a primogeniture sanad was granted. This brings us to the second part of respondent 1's argument, namely that the effect of applying the Act in the present case would not be to deprive any one of rights which were already vested in him. We shall first take up for consideration the question whether there did in fact exist any sanad which governed succession to Madho Prasad Singh in 1862 The presumption arising out of the entry in list III will not stand in the way of such an enquiry in this case any more than it stood in the way of their Lordships not relying upon any primogeniture sanad in 31 I. A. 30[1] since this enquiry is directed to ascertain whether any rights are divested or not by the application of Act 1 [I] of 1869 or in other words, whether the Act has application to this case or not.

[34] The appellants maintain that no sanad of any sort was granted whilst respondent 1 contends, not that Madho Prasad Singh obtained any separate sanad for himself but that he obtained a conjoint sanad with Kishen Prasad Singh and the other Birhar Taluqdars to which a primogeniture clause was subsequently added.

[35] The first objection taken by the appellants' learned advocate is that a departure has been made from the position adopted by respondent 1 in his pleadings with regard to the grant of a joint sanad. In the pleadings it was stated, "a joint Taluqdari sanad and later a primogeniture sanad was granted" (vide paragraph 18 of defendant 1's written statement and the proceedings of 27th January 1939), while at the time of opening his case, and throughout thereafter the position taken has been that "in the joint Taluqdari sanad which had been given to Babu Kishen Prasad Singh a primogeniture clause was added as a supplementary clause. The original sanad was revised on 9th November 1860." It is contended that this is a material departure from the pleadings since the allegation that two sanads were granted was changed to one that one sanad only was granted and that that was later revised. Consequently, it is argued, the Court should, in view of O. 6, R. 7, Civil P. C., not allow this departure and should ignore the subsequent plea. The learned Additional Civil Judge overruled this objection.

[36] In the present case the nature of the respondents' defence was made perfectly clear and it was not a very material fact whether there were two different sanads or one to which a clause was added. The respondent could have no personal knowledge of the facts and whatever information he had was derived from the documents which are all now before us. The issue framed No. 2 (3), was sufficiently wide to cover the case now set up and all the documents relating to the grant of sanads are before the Court so that no prejudice has been caused to the plaintiffs. Thus the objection was rightly overruled.

[37] We may, in support of our view, advantageously refer to the decision of the Judicial Committee in 32 I. A. 203.[16] In that case the appellant had based his title upon a custom excluding females and upon the application of ACT 1 [I] of 1869. Both these points were decided against him by the Courts in India and before their Lordships he set up a third case, namely, that succession was regulated by a primogeniture sanad. Their Lordships overruled the objection that this was setting up a new case and allowed the appeal on the new plea. They say at page 212 :

"With regard to the case as now presented on behalf of the appellant it was objected in the first place that this was a new case ..... that in his written statement in this suit no sanad to Girwar is mentioned; and that no specific issue was settled as to such a sanad. And all this is true. But the issues as settled were sufficiently wide to cover the case now presented. And what is of more moment from an early stage of the case down to the latest, all parties appear to have been alive to the importance of such a document if it was in fact granted, and if its contents could be ascertained..... Each Court considered both the question of the grant of the alleged sanad and its legal bearing upon the rights of the parties.

Their Lordships are satisfied that the respondents are not unfairly taken by surprise by the manner in which the case is now presented and that there is no danger of doing injustice by disposing of this appeal upon that footing."

[38] We come then to the merits of the question and it becomes necessary to determine, (a) whether a taluqdari sanad was issued to Babu Madho Prasad Singh conjointly with the three other Birhar Babus and (b) whether the joint sanad was subsequently transformed into a primogeniture sanad. In support of his case that no sanad at all was issued to Babu Madho Prasad Singh, the appellants' learned advocate relies upon EXS. 24, 25, 148, A-66, 26 and A-101.

[39] Madho Prasad Singh died on 12th November 1862 and proceedings for the mutation of names took place. On 24th January 1863 the Deputy Commissioner ordered mutation in favour of Har Dutt Singh as talukdar. A copy of this order was forwarded to the Commissioner and on 5th February 1863 the Commissioner, Mr. Simson, approved of mutation being made but wrote :

" ..... You should not have recorded Har Datt Singh as a Taluqdar and you are now clearly to give him and all concerned to understand that he is not yet recognised as such."

He also says, in paragraph 3 :

" ..... You could have ascertained from your office that the Chief Commissioner deferred giving him a sunnud with the Taluqdars of the District because there are doubts how far 'this is a Taluqa: vide Ex. 24.'"

A copy of this letter was forwarded to the Chief Commissioner (Ex. 25) and it does not appear to have elicited any comments from him—at least none have been filed in this case. This letter clearly indicates that not only had Madho Prasad Singh not received any sanad so long as he lived but that it was even considered doubtful whether his estate was taluqa.

[40] The next document to which reference is made is EX. 148. From this it appears that in 1863 a sanad was forwarded to the Deputy Commissioner for delivery to Kishen Prasad. The Deputy Commissioner, Mr. Carnegy, considered that this had been done by an oversight and pointed this out to the Commissioner, Mr. Simson who acknowledged the mistake and wrote :

"(2) Whether the Birhar estates are or are not Taluqas is a question of tenure which must be enquired into and settled in the Settlement Department as no further correspondence exists on the subject in this office.

(3) I am inclined to think that the Chief Commissioner's doubts on the subject were raised by the frequent partitions of estates between members of the same family which has occurred in Birhar, which is not ordinarily an incident of the tenure of Taluqdaree estates in Oudh.

(4) But other proprietors in Fyzabad and elsewhere in whose family partitions of inherited land have occurred have been recognised as Taluqdars, and I consider the question an open one to be enquired into and reported on in the Settlement Department for the Chief Commissioner's orders."

This letter supports the Commissioner's remarks in EX. 24 and it also shows that although the sanad in the name of Kishen Prasad Singh had been prepared to be issued, it had not been issued till April 1863, i. e., the date of the sanad is not necessarily the date of its issue (vide also Chief Commissioner's Circular NO. 154/3431, dated 26th September 1860 —EX. A-155) and 16 I. A 71.[11]

[41] The next series of papers relates to proceedings in the settlement Courts in a suit instituted by Seetal Parsad against his brother, Sheo Prakash Singh, for a share in the estate settled with him. From EX. A-66 it appears that the case took a very tedious course but at no stage did Sheo Prakash Singh set up any sanad as a bar to the claim nor did the settlement officer in accordance with the directions contained in Circular NO. 2 of 1851, dismiss the suit summarily as being barred by a sanad. At one stage it had been ordered that Sheo Prakash Singh and his two brothers should each get 1/3rd of the estate but this order was set aside by the Commissioner and the Chief Commissioner on the ground of limitation. No sanad is mentioned as a bar. This would also indicate that although a sanad had been prepared for him on 15th March 1861 (vide EXS. 205 and 206) it had not been delivered to him till May, 1863 i. e., the grant of the sanad to him had been deferred. In the proceedings of 16th May 1863 we also find the following remarks by the Settlement Officer:

"Parties present, also the three other Birhar Babus. As the case involves the question whether all these Babus are Taluqdars or not it is well that they should all be heard."

Thus not only did the Settlement Officer categorically state that a sanad was not granted but he acted on this basis and was making an enquiry as to whether the Birhar estates were taluqas.

[42] On appeal from the order in this case, the Settlement Commissioner, Mr. Charles Currie, made enquiries from the Settlement Officer with regard to the following among other points (vide EX. 26):

"1st Has Babu Sheo Prakash Singh respondent a Taluqdaree sanad for his share of the Birhar estate or not? If he has, how came Settlement Officer to admit any claim to the proprietary right in villages settled with the Taluqdar?"

In reply the Settlement Officer stated (vide EX.26):

"No sanad has been given vide Mr. Secretary Currie's" (the same gentleman who was the Settlement Commissioner) "No 3956 of 9th November, 1860 with tabular statement of Taluqdars, on which the Birhar sanads were ordered to be deferred.

Case taken up under Chief Commissioner's order 2356 of 6th September 1862, referring it to Settlement Department, as quoted in my notes."

It was only after this suit had been decided by the settlement Courts that the question of the grant of sanads to the Babus was taken up again. Exhibit A-137/D. W. 1, which is the copy of an extract from the Despatch Register of the Settlement Commissioner's office shows that on 4-9-1863, letter NO. 2392 was sent to the Chief Commissioner, the subject of which was as follows:

"Taluqdari sannads. Babus of the Birhar Estate.

With reference to No. 3906, dated 9th November 1860, to Commissioner, Fyzabad forwards copy of letter No. 92, dated 7th August from the Settlement Officer of Fyzabad urging for a final decision as to whether the 4 Birhar Baboos are Taluqdars or not. Details particulars and gives as his opinion that they should get sanads and be declared Taluqdars of their respective estates."

[43] The reply of the Chief Commissioner was conveyed by letter NO. 2741, dated 16th September 1863 and it was to the effect that each of the Baboos "will receive a sanad." (vide EXS. A-104 and A-133/D. W. 4). The correspondence fully supports the statement that no sanads had been granted to any of the Birhar Baboos till then.

[44] Exhibit A-101 is the certified copy of an extract from the list of sanads issued by the Chief Commissioner in which in the column headed "Date of original sanad" against Kishen Prasad Singh's name the words "none issued" are entered. It is worthy of note that if a sanad had been issued to Madho Prasad Singh, his name would also have found a place in this list yet no entry relating to him has been filed. The appellant's learned advocate stated that Madho Prasad Singh's name was not entered in the list and hence no copy of any entry relating to him could be filed; but no reason appears why respondent 1 did not file any extract, if any such entry did exist.

[45] The appellant's learned advocate also referred to the fact that a separate summary settlement had been made with each of the Birhar Babus—EXS. 17, 18, A-5, A-6, 155, A-87 and A-2—and that they had executed separate kabuliats: vide EXS. A-1, 20, 22 and 23—as showing that it was not likely that one sanad would have been granted. Sanads do not give a list of property but refer to the list attached to the kabuliat executed by the taluqdar and give the land revenue payable by him. In the present case the lists were separate and the land revenue was separately assessed. The fact that the settlement file of all the four cases was one, a fact upon which respondent 1 relied, would not affect the matter. There is considerable force in this argument which is further supported by the fact that, in the course of official enquiries as to primogeniture the letter of the Deputy Commissioner, Fyzabad, EX. A-161, expressly mentioned the case of those taluqdars who held under one sanad and did not mention the fact that Kishen Prasad Singh and others also held under one sanad.

[46] The next fact to which the appellants' learned advocate referred was that, when lists came to be prepared under Act I of 1869, taluqdars who held under one sanad were shown jointly under one number: vide the entries in list I at NOS. 17, 28, 30, 101, 114, 131, 133, 147, 194, 196, 197, 218, 229, 231, 258, 259 and 262. This is in accordance with the direction contained in paragraph 3 of the Chief Commissioner's letter NO. 158, dated 19-1 1869, which initiated the preparation of the lists of taluqdars under S. 8. The Chief Commissioner directed:

"If an estate for which a sanad has been granted is held in shares, the name of each sharer will be entered in the list and they will be joined by a bracket, the rest of the entry being one."

Yet in the case of the Birhar Babus all the four taluqdars are separately entered. Further when the lists were being prepared under S. 8 of the Act it was stated that there was no doubt as to Kishen Prasad's right to be called a taluqdar but sanads had not been distributed to several taluqdars, including, Sheo Prakash Singh, because the "biswas" question (i. e., the extent of shares) with regard to their estates had not been decided and Madho Prasad Singh's name was entered as a taluqdar who had not received a sanad. Mahip Narain Singh is not entered at all (vide EX. 27). In this document the date of the sanad granted to some taluqdars is given as 25-10-1859, which was the date on which sanads were granted to these taluqdars who attended Lord Canning's Darbar, but the date of the sanad to Kishen Prasad Singh is 15-3-1861, which is the date of EXS 205 and 206, copies of a sanad granted to Kishen Prasad Singh and Sheo Prakash Singh jointly. This also indicates that Kishen Prasad Singh either did not attend the Governor-General's Darbar or if he did he did not get a sanad.

[47] There can be no doubt that all this evidence substantiates the appellants' case that no sanad of any kind was granted to Madho Prasad Singh. Respondent 1's learned counsel, however, contends that some confusion has crept in and that there is a substantial amount of evidence —EXS A-15, A-16, A-94, A-98, A-101—to show that a joint sanad was issued. He contends that the history of the grant of the sanads makes it certain that Madho Prasad Singh would have received a sanad and he suggests that whenever it is said that no sanad was issued it means that no separate sanad was issued. In order to understand the force of his arguments and the true import of the evidence produced by the parties it has become necessary for us to go back to the history of the period during which sanads were granted to taluqdars.

[48] It is well known that, on the annexation of Oudh, Lord Dalhousie directed the exclusion of taluqdars whom he classed as mere middlemen. Engagements for the revenue were to be made with the "actual occupants of the soil." The result of this policy was that, in the disorders of 1856 to 1858, the taluqdars with very few exceptions, took a leading part against the British and the "actual occupants of the soil" did not fulfil expectations and failed to support the power to which they owed so much.

[49] When the policy to be pursued on a reconquest of Oudh was under the consideration of the Government, Major-General Outram, then holding the office of the Chief Commissioner of Oudh, suggested :

"The lands of men who have taken an active part against us should be largely confiscated, in order, among other reasons to enable us to reward others in the manner most acceptable to a native. But I see no prospect of restoring tranquillity except by having recourse for the next few years to the old Talookdari system.

The Talookdars have both power and influence to exercise either for or against us. The village proprietors have neither" (vide Oudh Papers 1865 Cal. page 40).

[50] Lord Canning, who was now at the head of affairs, agreed with this policy and in order to create a tabula rasa for its enforcement he directed the issue of his famous Proclamation of 15-3-1858, confiscating to Government all proprietary rights in the soil of Oudh. This proclamation, stated :

"To those amongst them" (i. e., the Taludars) "who shall promptly come forward and give the Chief Commissioner their support in the restoration of peace and order this indulgence will be large and the Governor-General will be ready to view liberally the claim which they may thus acquire to a restitution of their former rights."

[51] General Outram, in forwarding a copy of the proclamation, wrote a letter to each taulqdar stating:

"If you at once come in, ready to obey his orders, none of your lands will be confiscated and your claims to lands held by you prior to annexation will be heard." (See 6 I. A. 63)[17].

Thereafter further letters containing similar promises, were sent to taluqdars, the last being dated 23-6-1858 (vide Ali Hasan's Commentary on the Oudh Estates Act, Appendix D, page 53). In this letter it was stated :

"the object with which this letter is written to you is to assure you that the Government will preserve to you your life and property and confirm you in the estate possessed by you during the Nawabee."

This letter also authorised taluqdars to send agents if they could not appear in person.

[52] The second summary settlement was commenced to effectuate this new policy but before the regular operations commenced in the winter season of 1858, the Governer-General had sent a detailed letter of instructions to the Chief Commissioner (NO. 3502 dated 6-10-1858, Oudh Papers relating to the Revenue Settlement 1865 Cal., page 24). In this letter it was laid down that, for the reasons which it gave, it had been decided to make a taluqdari settlement and that the taluqdars were to be called upon to help in restoring peace. At the same time it was directed that the village occupants were to be protected from extortion. The details were, however, left to the Chief Commissioner and his officers to work out.

[53] Madho Prasad Singh avoided appearance before the Deputy Commissioner of Fyzabad in spite of repeated directions to appear : vide EXS. 4, 7, 10, 12, 13 and 15. He, however, kept on writing letters explaining the reasons for his absence and even sent an agent : vide EXS. 5, 6, 3 and 14. Eventually, on 10-8-1858, a proclamation was issued notifying that unless the taluqdars named therein including Madho Prasad Singh and the other three Birhar taluqdars, appeared within fifteen days, their estates would be settled with others (vide EX. 8). Madho Prasad Singh failed to appear even then and it was notified that his estate would be settled with others : vide EX. 11. It was only after this that he appeared. On the basis of these facts, the appellants' learned advocate contended that Madho Prasad Singh was a refractory and rebellious individual who is not likely to have been recognised as a taluqdar or to have got a sanad.

[54] The conduct of Madho Prasad Singh was, however, not more refractory or hostile than that of practically all the other taluqdars. Indeed it is clear that he was considered worthy of special approbation in having saved the lives of English men and women in the early days of the mutiny: vide Exs. 12, 16, 158 and A-103. Further the letter of 22-6-1858, from which we have quoted in an earlier portion of this judgment and Ex. 8 itself indicate that a very large number of taluqdars were behaving in exactly the same manner as Madho Prasad Singh. In a letter dated 17-10-1859, the Secretary to the Chief Commissioner wrote to the Secretary of the Government of India (vide para 30):

"The Chief Commissioner here takes the liberty of recording that one great difficulty of re-settlement in the province in 1858 lay in the grave incredulity of the taluqdars....."

And again in the Report on the Administration of Oudh for 1859-1860 it is stated in para. 129:

"It is certain that many of the less intelligent attended the Darbar" (of the 26-10-1859) "with serious fears for their personal safety" (vide Oudh Paper No. 426 of 1861).

[55] Whatever may have been his conduct at an earlier period, Madho Prasad Singh did appear eventually, summary settlement was made with him and in January 1859, he executed a kabuliat. Thus by the time that the occasion for the grant of sanads arose, he had already got back his estate: vide Exs. A-86, 17, A-5, A-6, A-87, 155 and A-1.

[56] The next step in the Government policy was the issue, on 28th January 1859, of Circular No. 31 of 1859, by the Special Commissioner of Revenue under the orders of Mr. (later Sir Robert) Montgomery and it provided (vide Oudh Papers relating to the Revenue Settlement 1865, Calcutta page 42):

"3.....In making the settlement of lands every case has been carefully examined by the Deputy Commissioners and the Special Commissioner of Revenue and has also rigidly been scrutinised by the Chief Commissioner. The rights which he now confers on each holder of land are free and incontestable grant from the paramount power and cannot be called into question by subordinate officers.

4.....The rights and claims of all parties have been duly weighed, their conduct during the rebellion and their position as regards the taluqdars, fully considered and the decision in each case which has received the confirmation of the Chief Commissioner's approval, is to be considered final and lasting.....

6. Whether right or wrong certain principles have been laid down by the supreme Government and they are to be acted upon, and landholders are to be encouraged to feel that what they receive now they will retain for ever."

[57] It appears that, in spite of the numerous letters from the Chief Commissioner to the taluqdars which promised them a restoration of their rights, supported by Circular No. 31, no class of people in the province believed in the permanency of the settlement. Accordingly Major Barrow, the Special Commissioner of Revenue proposed that sanads should be issued to the principal taluqdars and on 7th May 1859, he submitted a list of taluqdars to whom he recommended that sanads should be given (vide letter No. 2815, dated 21th June 1859, from Major L. Barrow to the Chief Commissioner—Oudh Papers relating to the Revenue Settlement, 1865, Calcutta, p. 46, paragraph 12). Thereafter the new Chief Commissioner, Mr. (later Sir Charles) Wingfield, addressed a communication to the Government of India asking for an early recognition of the finality of the settlement (vide letter No. 1091, dated 4th June 1859—Oudh Papers 1865 Cal., page 94). He followed this up by letter No. 1377 dated 15th July 1859 in paragraph 10 of which he sought permission to send up a list of taluqdars to whom he wished sanads conferring proprietary rights in perpetuity to be granted. (vide Oudh Papers 1865, Cal., page 95).

[58] In reply to the Chief Commissioner's communication the Governor General wrote on 6th October 1859 as follows:

"The Governor-General agrees with you generally with regard to the absolute title conferred on the Taluqdars by the summary settlement. Sunnuds will be given to the Taluqdars not by the Governor-General in Council but by the Chief Commissioner under authority from the Governor-General in Council. The sanads should be prepared so as to be ready for issue when the Governor-General is at Lucknow."

[59] This message was followed by the letters of 10th and 19th October 1859, which have been incorporated in Act I of 1859 as Schedule I. In the first of these letters the Governor-General approved of the proposal to grant sanads and asked the Chief Commissioner to have ready a list of taluqdars to whom it was proposed to grant sanads. The letters added:

"5. I am directed to add that as regards zamindars and others not being Talookdars with whom a summary settlement has been made the orders conveyed in the limitation circular No. 31 of the 28th January 1859, must not be strictly observed. Opportunity must be allowed at the next settlement to all disappointed claimants to bring forward their claims, and all the claims must be heard and disposed of in the usual manner."

[60] By the second letter the form of sanad to be issued was, with some modification, approved. Lord Canning held his Darbar at Lucknow on 26th October 1859, and the sanads were issued on the previous day to those taluqdars who were present. It is unfortunate that neither the list forwarded by Major Barrow nor that which the Chief Commissioner was directed to prepare is available either in the records of the province or of the Government of India. It is thus not possible to say whether the name of Babu Madho Prasad Singh or of any of the Birhar Babus appears in either of the lists. It is, however, agreed that Madho Prasad Singh did not attend the Governor-General's Darbar but it is contended that Kishen Prasad Singh did and obtained a joint sanad for all the four Birhar Babus.

[61] The learned counsel for respondent 1 contends that although, in view of Circular No. 31 it was not necessary to differentiate in making the summary settlement between those who held on the taluqdari tenure and those who held under other tenures, yet such a distinction was made as is clear from the letter of Major Barrow, dated 24th June 1859 to which we have already referred and the statements attached to it. These statements show that figures were given separately for the land revenue payable in respect of those estates which were held on taluqdari tenure and those which were not so held. Other official papers also show the same thing. The argument proceeds that the papers relating to the second summary settlement indicate that it was made with the Birhar Babus, including Madho Prasad Singh, as taluqdars and that the estate was settled as a taluqa. The file itself is called the file "in respect of Taluqa Chandipur Birhar of Babu Madho Prasad Singh, Babu Mahip Narain Singh, Babu Sheo Prakash Singh and Babu Kishen Prasad Singh Taluqdars. . . . ."—vide Exs. 2, 3, 4, 5, 6 and numerous other documents taken from the file. Then there is a considerable amount of evidence which establishes that at that period Madho Prasad Singh and the other Birhar Babus were referred to as taluqdars and their estates were called taluqas—vide, for instance Exs. A-87, 155, 18, 17, 8 and A-86, A-5, A-6, A-1, 20, 22 and 23.

[62] From this it is contended that Madho Prasad Singh must get the benefit of the provisions of the letter of the Governor-General, dated 10th October 1859, relating to taluqdars, and must be deemed by operation of that letter, to have acquired full heritable and transferable rights in the property entered in the list attached to his kabuliat and he would in due course get a sanad. It cannot, however, be said that the authorities understood the letter of 1859 as operating in favour of all persons who had been designated in the records of the summary settlement as taluqdars. We find that, as late as the 29th January 1861, when the Chief Commissioner was issuing instructions for the regular settlement of the province he stated in paragraph 7 of Circular No. 2 of 1861 (vide Settlement Circulars, page 4 at page 13):

"The above observations refer to villages settled with talooqdars. With regard to zamindars and all other parties not being taluqdars with whom the summary settlement has been made the orders of Government No. 6268 of the 18th (sic 10th) October are that the last Chief Commissioner's Circular No. 31 of the 28th January 1859, must not be strictly enforced; and that "These instructions are too clear to need comment. All who are not talooqdars will be known by their not having received a sunnud. . . . ."

[63] It was the Governor-General's letter of 10th October 1859 that for the first time drew a distinction between the rights conferred upon taluqdars and those conferred upon persons who were not taluqdars. Accordingly it only became necessary to determine who were in fact taluqdars after this letter had been written. Circular No. 165-2715, dated 1st December 1859 (Oudh Papers 1865 Cal., page 89) directed that whenever there were two interests in the land the holder of the superior interest was to be deemed to be a taluqdar. This was construed to mean that there could be no taluqdar unless there were two interests in the land and on this being brought to the notice of the Chief Commissioner, his instructions were modified and it was directed "every opulent landlord paying revenue direct to the Government whether there be holders intermediate between him and the actual cultivator of the soil or not" was to be deemed to a taluqdar; (vide letter No. 1560 dated 25th April 1860 from the Secretary to the Chief Commissioner to the Commissioner, Lucknow Division, Oudh Papers 1865 Cal., page 89). The approval of the Government of India was conveyed by letter No. 4060 from the Secretary to the Government of India to the Chief Commissioner of Oudh, dated 12th September 1860 paragraph 19 (Oudh Papers-1865, Cal., page 92 (94)).

[64] Later, on 14th December 1861 the officiating Chief Commissioner issued Circular No. 19 of 1861 (vide Settlement Circulars, p. 24) which stated in paragraph 3:

"The officiating Chief Commissioner desires me to observe, that several attempts have been made to define the term 'taluqdar' but not one of them can be said to be altogether successful. The restriction of the word to estates paying Rs. 5,000 annal revenue was made for convenience sake only: it did not alter the meaning of the word. Whenever there are two rights, superior and inferior, in an estate the superior one must be taluqdaree, though the property may be so small as not to entitle the holder to a sunnud or to be reckoned as a taluqdar in popular opinion. . . .and the Chief Commissioner thinks it better to retain the word taluqa to express the superior right whenever two rights exist and the properitor of that right must be styled as taluqdar and so addressed in all official documents. The practice will present confusion and do no injury to any one and the present rules ordering that the smaller landed proprietors are not to receive sanads, or be exempt from enquiry into the validity of their titles at the approaching settlement will not be affected."

[65] Thus it came about that a large number of persons were classed as taluqdars whom it had never been intended to put in that position (vide letter dated 31st December 1868, from Major I. F. MacAndrew, Secretary to the Chief Commissioner of Oudh to the Government of India, Home Department, being paper NO. 1 relative to the Bill to define the rights of taluqdars).

[66] These documents indicate that every one who was classified as a taluqdar at the time of the second summary settlement or even afterwards, was not to get the benefit conferred upon taluqdars by the letter of 10th October 1859, i. e. the privilege of not having his title enquired into again at the time of the regular settlement. Even however, if we were to accept the respondents' contention that that letter did confer permanent hereditary and transferable rights upon Madho Prasad Singh, it does not follow that he necessarily got a sanad. Exhibit A-16 states in clear and specific terms that there was at least one taluqdar in the Fyzabad District Hakim Shefa-ud-daula with whom a summary settlement was made but who got no sanad. There is no reason to hold that evidence which shows that Madho did not receive a sanad as inaccurate.

[67] In 1859 there were considered to be 690 taluqdars in Oudh (vide Mr. (later Sir Robert) Montgomery's report on the Administration of Oudh for 1858-1859, Oudh Paper NO. 74 of 1859), but out of them only 150 of the principal taluqdars were present at Lord Canning's Darbar held on 26th October 1859 and it was only to those that sanads were issued at that time (vide paragraph 129 of the Report on the Administration of Oudh for 1859-1860—Oudh Paper NO. 426 of 1861, page 130). Moreover, even initially, Major Barrow had recommended the grant of sanads not to all the taluqdars but only to the "principal taluqdars." Mr. Wasim contends that Madho Prasad Singh must be deemed to be one of the principal taluqdars since he paid a considerable sum as Government revenue—about RS. 25,000—and was considered worthy of "being noticed" by the Government (vide EX. A-103). Further, he was not only referred to in the Government papers as a taluqdar but he and the other three Birhar Babus were actually invited to, and attended, a Darbar held by Lord Canning at Lucknow on 5th NOVEMBER 1861; (vide Notification NO. 7 in the Foreign Department published in the Calcutta Gazette (Extraordinary) dated 5th NOVEMBER 1861). It is argued that all these facts lead to the inference that a sanad must have been granted to Madho Prasad Singh. We cannot accept this contention.

[68] The circumstances narrated are by no means decisive and it is not even the case of respondent 1 that Madho Prasad Singh did in fact attend Lord Canning's Darbar of 1859. It was only to persons that attended that Durbar that sanads were issued at that time, though, in the case of a joint sanad, it was not necessary that all the persons entered in it should have attended. It was for that reason that the respondent contended that Kishen Prasad Singh did attend the Durbar and that he obtained a sanad for the benefit of all the Birhar taluqdars. We come then to a consideration of the evidence on the question of the grant of a sanad to Kishen Prasad Singh at the Darbar.

[69] Neither the original nor a copy of the sanad said to have been granted to Babu Kishen Prasad Singh as respresenting all the Birhar taluqdars is available. Mr. Wasim urged that the original sanad must be with the heirs of Kishen Prasad Singh, who are deliberately withholding it. He refers to certain proceedings in the trial Court which would indicate that Babu Kamlapat Prasad Singh, grandson and successor of Babu Kishen Prasad Singh, is supporting the plaintiffs. However true his complaint might be, we cannot hold that the sanad is being withheld until it is proved that one ever existed: merely from the fact of the partiality of Babu Kamlapat Prasad Singh it cannot be presumed that a sanad existed and is being withheld.

[70] In proof of the grant of sanad to Kishen Prasad Singh, reliance is placed principally upon two documents, EXS. A-15 and A-98. The admissibility of these documents has been vehemently attacked by the appellants and it has been argued that even if they are admissible their value is practically nil. The documents must, therefore, be closely examined.

[71] Exhibit A-98 is a book compiled by one Kishori Lal, who was the reader of the President of the British Indian Association of the Taluqdars of Oudh. It was published in 1879. Exhibit A-15 is the copy of an extract from a list of taluqdars of the Fyzabad District, obtained from the office of the Board of Revenue, U. P. This document was originally a part of file NO. "1964 General" but in 1938, when an officer was deputed by the Government to re-arrange the papers in the office of the Board of Revenue it was removed from that file and brought on to file NO. 459, relating to "Talukdari lists under Act I of 1869, Fyzabad District" on which it is now to be found. The latter file has been brought before us and we have examined it carefully but file NO. "1964 General" is no longer traceable. Thus though this document is to be found in the record maintained in the office of the Board of Revenue, it does not appear from these records who prepared it or when or why it was prepared. The file on which it is now placed is the file relating to the preparation of list under Act I of 1869 and it is contended by respondent 1 that it was compiled for the purpose of preparing those lists. Further, although it does not appear from anything contained in EX. A-15 itself as to who prepared it, it is in reality an English translation of EX. A-98 and the author of EX. A-98 tells us that in his remarks regarding each estate

"he had entered those very particulars of each estate which His Highness Maharaja Sir Man Singh.....in obedience to the orders of General L. Barrow, former Chief Commissioner of Oudh, during the preparation of the lists of Act I of 1869, had in a Committee of the British Indian Association collected from the Government records and presented before the said General and according to which the list of Act I of 1869 was prepared."

If this statement is accepted at its face value EX. A-15 is a translation of the list prepared by Maharaja Man Singh.

[72] The file on which the papers at present exist was summoned before us by the parties in order to assist us in determining the exact nature of the documents and on the third page of the file we find the following entry "Remarks from Maharaja's report". This entry indicates that Maharaja Man Singh did prepare a report containing remarks about various persons. Moreover a reference to official documents shows that the Maharaja had a great hand in the preparation of the lists under Act I of 1869. By his letter dated 31st December 1868, Major I. F. Macandrew submitted to the Government of India some comments on, and proposed amendments to the Oudh Estates Bill after a discussion with the leading taluqdars. In para. 5 of that letter, it was stated that :

"The Chief Commissioner, therefore, proposes that the list shall be drafted by the Financial Commissioner and a taluqdar in whom others have confidence and finally submitted for his approval."

In his letter NO. 158, dated 19th January 1869, addressed to the Financial Commissioner, which directed the preparation of the list under Act I of 1869 the Chief Commissioner, wrote :

"2. The lists will be made in the first instance by the Deputy Commissioners who should take the orders of the Commissioners regarding any name, the claim to the entry of which seems doubtful. The lists will be revised most carefully by yourself in conference with Maharaja Man Singh and compiled for the whole province and will be submitted for the orders of the Chief Commissioner by the 1st June next."

[73] It would, therefore, appear that EX. A-15 is an extract from a list prepared by or under the directions of, Maharaja Man Singh as is stated in the preface to EX. A-98 for the purpose of assisting in the preparation of the lists under Act I of 1869. There was, however, no duty imposed upon Maharaja Man Singh to prepare such a list : he had merely to assist in revising the lists prepared by the Deputy Commissioners. Nevertheless he could not be expected to have personal knowledge of the claims of all the taluqdars in Oudh and the list, of which EX. A-15 is an extract, appears to have been prepared to assist him. That also explains why, although that list was kept with the official records by the Board of Revenue in the same way as some other files of the British Indian Association relating to judicial matters are kept in the record room of this Court, it was kept as a separate file and not incorporated in the file of which it now forms a part. It obviously cannot be treated as an official paper and consequently is not admissible under S. 35, Evidence Act.

[74] From what we have said, it does not follow that the document is not admissible in evidence: it does not stand on any worse footing than statements made in awards given by the British Indian Association with regard to maintenance of relatives of taluqdars which do not fall within the scope of S. 33, Oudh Estates Act. Such statements made in an award signed by the same Maharaja Man Singh relating to a custom, the grant of a sanad and the execution of a kabuliat, were admitted in evidence and considered by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in 25 I. A. 161[18] at pp. 168-169. Thus EX. A-15 is admissible in evidence though not as an official document. It is, however, a different matter as to what weight should be attached to it.

[75] Although Maharaja Man Singh was considered by the Government to be a taluqdar who had greater knowledge than his other brethren as to the claims of various individuals to be treated as taluqdars it cannot be supposed that he had personal knowledge of the details of all the cases with which his notes dealt. Kishori Lal would have us accept the position that the Maharaja's remarks were called from official papers. It is, however, impossible to believe that, in the short time at his disposal from the end of December 1868 to 1st June 1869 he could possibly have carried out an investigation into the official records of 12 districts as well as of the various Commissionerships and of the Chief Commissioner's and Financial Commissioner's offices. Not much weight can, therefore, attach to his remarks in each case, particularly when it relates to such knowledge as might be derived from official records but does not tally with the remarks of the Deputy Commissioners.

[76] With regard to the particular entry with which we are concerned we cannot attach much weight to it. It is to be noticed that the remarks are made opposite the name of Sheo Prakash Singh. The name of Kishen Prasad Singh who according to the remarks was the actual recipient of the sanad was not even entered in the list and his name was subsequently inserted by someone in pencil with a note of interrogation after it. Further the names of Madho Prasad

Singh and Mahip Narain Singh came much later in the list and were also inserted by someone in pencil and no remarks are made against them although having regard to the scheme of the rest of the list their names ought to have all been given together at the same place if they held under one sanad. Further although it is mentioned that Kishen Prasad Singh got a sanad at the Darbar the column meant to indicate the sanad and the language in which it was issued is left blank while in the case of every other Taluqdar mentioned in the list it is filled in.

[77] The learned advocates for the parties referred us to a large number of decisions as to the admissibility of such books as Ex. A-98 in evidence as being books of reference on matters of "public history", and as to whether the history of individual taluqdars could be considered as "public history." It is not, however, necessary for us to decide this point because Ex. A-98 does not claim to be anything more than the Urdu edition of Ex. A-15, and it stands or falls with it. We have already held that, though Ex. A-15 is admissible in evidence, very little weight can be attached to it in the present instance in so far as it states that Kishen Prasad Singh attended the Darbar of 1859 and got a kabuliat for all the four Birhar Babus. The same considerations apply to Ex. A-98.

[78] These two documents constitute the only evidence in support of the assertion that Kishen Prasad Singh was present at the Darbar and got a sanad for all the four Birhar Taluqdars, but respondent 1 seeks corroboration of his case of a joint sanad from a remark made by some officer, either the Settlement Commissioner, or, more probably some Assistant Settlement Officer that the names of the four Babus "are entered as proprietors in the Birhar Pargana Sunnad" —Ex. A-94.

[79] The appellants' learned advocate contests the admissibility of this document also. Firstly he urges that it is sought to utilise it as evidence of the contents of a document containing a grant namely the sanad inasmuch as it shows that the grant was in favour of four persons. He urges that, under S. 91, Evidence Act, the grant can only be proved by the production of the sanad itself or by secondary evidence. He referred to a large number of authorities in support of this proposition but it is not necessary for us to consider them because the learned counsel for respondent 1 concedes it but he contends that he can prove the fact of a grant to Madho Prasad Singh and others as distinct from the terms of the grant by such evidence which is admissible as a copy of an entry in a public record. This argument is fully supported by 61 I. A. 286[19] at p. 306 in which a statement in a decree that a pedigree had been filed was relied upon, 5 O. W. N. 299,[20] in which a statement in a wajib-ul-arz that a village was covered by a sanad was held to be admissible, to prove this fact, 1947 O. W. N. 168[21] at p. 171; 18 O. C. 122[22] at p. 124; 41 Bom. 466[23] at p. 470 and A. I. R. 1922 Pat. 222.[24] The whole position has been summed up in Basu's Commentary on the Evidence Act at page 1056 (third edition) which clearly brings out the distinction between proof of the terms of a contract or grant and proof of the fact that a grant was made or a contract was entered into. Monir in his "Law of Evidence," quoting Best on Evidence, says at pages 487 and 488:

"Where the contents of any document are in question, either as a fact in issue or a subalternate principal fact, the document is the proper evidence of its own contents, and all derivative proof is rejected until its absence is accounted for. But where a written instrument or document of any description is not the fact in issue and is merely used as evidence to prove some fact independent proof aliunde is receivable. Thus, although a receipt has been given for the payment of money, proof of the fact of payment of money may be given by any person who witnessed it. . . . . So, although where the contents of a marriage register are in issue, verbal evidence of those contents is not receivable yet the fact of the marriage may be proved by the independent evidence of a person who was present at it."

[80] The second objection to the admissibility of Ex. A-94 is that, though it was written by an official, it was not written in the performance of of an official duty and consequently S. 35 does not make it admissible. It is true that no enquiry as to whether there was a sanad or not was entrusted to the official who wrote Ex. A-94, nevertheless it was his duty to ascertain under proprietary rights, and the first step that he had to take in the performance of that duty was to ascertain how far the taluqdar admitted those rights. The letter was written to the Settlement Officer setting out the circumstances in which the enquiry was delayed and asking for further instructions. The object of mentioning a sanad was to show that while the persons who were classed by the rules as taluqdars had been sent for, a fifth person had claimed to be interested and it was necessary to ascertain his rights before statements could be called for from the superior proprietors. The statement which is contained in the letter was germane to his duties and is admissible as such under S. 35, Evidence Act.

[81] We will now consider the value to be attached to the remark in Ex. A-94. As we have already stated, all that was necessary to ascertain was whether the four Babus were the superior proprietors of the villages in respect of which the enquiry was being made. The original grant was not before the officer who wrote EX. A-94. There is nothing to indicate that there was any copy of it on the file of the case in which the letter was written. Further, the other papers from this file reveal that the Settlement Officer, the Deputy Commissioner, the Settlement Commissioner and the Commissioner were not aware of the existence of any such sanad. In the face of the other evidence on the record, this document can, therefore, not be accepted as showing that there was only one sanad for the whole of pargana Birhar. Incidentally we may note that 16 out of the 392 villages comprising pargana Birhar were held by other taluqdars (vide Fyzabad Settlement Report, page 207, paragraph 581) and consequently the description 'Birhar Pargana Sanad' is not accurate.

[82] The next set of the evidence upon which respondent 1 relies for the proposition that sanads must have been granted to Madho Prasad Singh and others is that enquiries were made from them as to whether they desired sanads in the primogeniture form or not and that replies were sent by them and their names were thereafter inserted in the list of taluqdars who desired primogeniture sanads: vide EXS. A-157, A-158 and A-8 read with EX. A-156/D. W. 7, A-7, A-11, A-155, A 161, A-153, A-162, A-10, A-12 and A-9. These documents are no doubt evidence of the fact that Babu Madho Prasad Singh and all the four Birhar Babus were considered to be taluqdars and enquiries were made from them with a view to grant them primogeniture sanads but then again this is no indication of the fact that a taluqdari sanad in the ordinary form had previously been granted to them.

[83] As has already been seen, all persons who were entitled to the privilege of being considered taluqdars had not been summoned to the Governor-General's Darbar. Consequently the Chief Commissioner had called upon the district authorities toforward to him lists of taluqdars who had not been so summoned so that sanads might be granted to them (vide Chief Commissioner's Circular NO. 7/217, dated 18th January 1860 which is EX. A156/D. W. 7 on the record). Before, however, these lists could be supplied (indeed even before the lists had been asked for) the Chief Commissioner had raised the question of entail and the grant of primogeniture sanads (vide Circular NO. 143/2281, dated 11th October 1859,—Oudh Papers 1865 Cal., page 326) and the Commissioners of divisions were accordingly informed that the Chief Commissioner had decided to suspend the grant of any further sanads until those questions had been finally settled : vide EX. A156/D. W. 7. This circular, therefore, did not call for declaration only from those taluqdars to whom sanads had already been granted but from all "taluqdars entitled to receive sanads" (see paragraph 4). Thus the utmost that the documents, to which reference has been made, prove is that Madho Prasad Singh was considered to be a taluqdar entitled to receive a sanad.

[84] The question of primogeniture and entail was not finally decided by the Government of India till 17th July 1860 when the Governor-General authorised the Chief Commissioner to issue new sanads containing the primogeniture clause to all such as accepted the condition which the Chief Commissioner sought to impose (vide letter NO. 2729 from the Secretary to the Government of India to the officiating Chief Commissioner of Oudh—Oudh Papers, 1865, Cal. pp. 331-333). Even this did not satisfy the Chief Commissioner and further correspondence ensued but the Governor-General was adamant and so on 26th September 1860, the Chief Commissioner issued his Circular NO. 154/3431 (EX. A-155) informing Commissioners of divisions of the Governor-General's decision and directing :

"2. Every Taluqdar in whose family the rule of primogeniture has not heretofore prevailed, must be called upon to declare in formal terms whether he is desirous that this rule shall henceforth be applicable to his estate or not. To all who answer in the affirmative sanads will be issued containing this condition, in addition to the conditions already sanctioned by the Governor-General.

3. A revised form of sanad in English and vernacular with this additional condition inserted, is forwarded for adoption.

4. Some of the Taluqdars in whose families the rule of primogeniture has not heretofore prevailed and who now desire the adoption have already received sanads these they will give up and they will receive sanads in the new form in exchange.

5. Some Commissioners have already sent in lists of the Taluqdars in their divisions who desire the adoption of this rule of primogeniture and sanads will be prepared in this office for delivery to them.

6. Blank forms of sanads will be sent to other Commissioners to be filled up and delivered to those who desire the adoption of the above rule.

7. To those Taluqdars who reply in the negative to the enquiry sanads in the original form will be presented from this office, if their names have been submitted to the Chief Commissioner and if not, through the Commissioner.

8. Cases in which doubts may arise whether the parties under engagements are to be considered taluqdars and as such entitled to a sanad should be referred to the Chief Commissioner ....."

[85] This correspondence discloses the fact that it only became possible to issue sanads after September 1860, and it is quite possible that the date which the fresh sanads bore was somewhere about 9th NOVEMBER 1860, which is stated in EX. A-101 to be the date of the revised sanad in favour of Kishen Prasad Singh. At this time Mr. Wingfield was the Chief Commissioner and no sanad bearing his signature, dated 9th NOVEMBER 1860, has been produced but there is a sanad in Urdu bearing his signature : it is dated 15th March 1861, and is in favour of both Kishen Prasad Singh and Sheo Prakash Singh (vide Exs 205 and 206). In that sanad the names of the other two Birhar Babus are not entered. As we have already seen, the date of the sanad is, however, no indication of the date on which it was actually given to the taluqdar: see 16 I. A. 71.[11] Thus it cannot be said that Mr. Carnegy was wrong when he reported on 14-7-1863, that "no sanad has been given" (vide Ex. 26) or that he was under misapprehension owing to a confusion between joint and separate sanads.

[86] A reference to some other papers of the period would indicate that there was reason for stopping the issue of sanads to the Birhar Babus until it had been ascertained what their rights were. In the confusion as to the meaning of the word 'taluqdar' that then prevailed the Chief Commissioner in his record of rights, Circular No. 2 of 1861 (vide Settlement Circulars Page 4 at page 13) ordered "all who are not taluqdars will be known by their not having received a sunnud . . . ." Thus if no sanads were issued to the Birhar Babus an enquiry into their rights during the course of regular settlement would not be barred while if sanads were issued such an enquiry would be barred and, as indicated in Ex. 148, the Chief Commissioner entertained doubts as to whether Birhar was a taluqa. The reason for this doubt is a matter of surmise and the Commissioner made a surmise in Ex. 148 but there is other evidence to show that there was cause for doubt.

[87] Exhibit 48 is a petition of Seetal Prasad dated 21-1-1859 by which he made a claim to one-third of the taluqa very shortly after the summary settlement with Sheo Prakash and long before any question of the grant of sanads arose. Further, Ex. A-66 shows that his claim was considered to be valid and was eventually decreed by one Settlement Officer. Moreover, at one time, as early as February 1859, the correctness of the claim had been acknowledged even by Sheo Prakash Singh himself (Ex. 50). Then before September 1860, the Chief Commissioner had received information which made him doubt what the real status of the Birhar Babus was. In the draft of Circular No. 2 of 1861 which he sent for the approval of the Government of India under cover of letter No. 3203 dated 7-9-1860 (vide Oudh Papers, 1865, Cal. page 105 at page 106), he wrote in paragraph 9 :

" Instances have been brought to the Chief Commissioner's notice where the intermediate holders have never paid the Taluqdar more, and sometimes not so much as the present Government demand, and the cause is not that the demand is high, but because being of the same family as the Talookdar and of independent and turbulent character, and he really no more than primus inter pares they have merely paid the revenue through him. (The Chief Commissioner, in these remarks, has more particularly in view the Birhar and Kapradah Taluqdars)."

Other remarks in the Circular show that the Chief Commissioner was of the opinion that, in such cases, the settlement ought never to have been made with the taluqdars. These remarks, which were allowed to remain in the Circular that was actually issued (see Circular No. 2 of 1861, Settlement Circulars page 4), clearly showed that the doubts of the Chief Commissioner arose from this knowledge and it is extremely probable that, when the question of the grant of sanads to the Birhar Babus arose, he preferred that an enquiry in the Settlement Courts should be allowed so that their true position might be determined before sanads were issued. The remarks of Mr. Carnegy and Mr. Simson, far from being based upon a misapprehension, find full corroboration from the papers of the period.

[88] The argument that the remarks of Messrs. Carnegy and Simson in Exs. 24, 148 and 26 refer to separate sanads as distinct from a joint sanad is wholly unsupportable. When the Settlement Commissioner desired to know whether a sanad had been issued it was with a view to ascertain whether the Settlement Courts had any jurisdiction at all to enterain Seetal Prasad's claim in view of the orders barring enquiry into titles in respect of lands held under sanads. When Mr. Carnegy gave his reply he intended to show that the Settlement Courts had jurisdiction. If a joint sanad existed that would have been as efficacious to bar enquiry as a separate sanad. Further it is said that there were doubts as to whether Birhar was a taluqa. A joint sanad would have constituted it a taluqa just as much as a separate sanad. It cannot, therefore, be held that in Exs. 24, 26 and 148 reference was to separate sanads as distinct from joint sanads.

[89] It was next argued that there were a large number of orders of Settlement Courts and Rubkars akbir, containing a summary of all the proceedings, prepared and kept on the settlement files in accordance with the directions of the Chief Commissioner, which indicate that claims were dismissed on the basis of the villages to which they related being covered by sanads. It is argued that all those orders and Rubkars were prepared before 9-1-1874, on which date the sanad to Har Dutt Singh was granted (Exs. A 126 and A-140). Consequently the reference must be to some other sanad. The argument proceeds that none of the sanads, or their copies, produced in this case is in favour of Madho Prasad Singh or Har Dutt Singh (vide Exs. 203, 204, 205, 206 and 207), and consequently the reference is to some other sanad. The orders and rubkars may be divided into two categories:

A. Cases in which Har Dutt Singh was a party with one or more of the other Babus.

Exhibits A-226, A-227 and A-228 are orders of Settlement Officers passed between 1864 and 1866.

Exhibits A-92, A-223, A-232 to A-243 and A-245 are Rubkars akhir bearing dates between October 1871 and July 1873.

B. Cases in which Har Dutt Singh was not a party.—

Exhibit A-224	Rubkar Akhir dated	12-8-1871.
Exhibit A-244	do.	10-6-1873.
Exhibit A-231	do.	28 5 1869.

The Rubkars were prepared under Circular No. 23 of 1864, dated 25-4-1864, and paragraph 13 of that Circular directed they should give a resume of all cases decided (vide Settlement Circulars page 98 at page 102).

These documents are no doubt admissible to show that a sanad was granted to the persons named: vide 3 Luck. 326[20] at p. 340, 1947 O. W. N. 168 [21] at p. 171, 1 Luck. 583 [12] at p. 597. Further it is not necessary to prove on what enquiry these entries were based: vide 1947 O. W. N. 5.[25] They are, however, by no means conclusive and cannot outweigh the positive assertion of Messrs. Carnegy and Simson that no sanad had been granted.

[90] The object of mentioning the sanad was to show that the claim must be summarily rejected. The record of rights Circular (No. 2 of 1861) had made it clear that enquiry in Settlement Courts against taluqdars was barred. The possession of sanads was evidence of the persons' status as taluqdars but it was not the only evidence. The real title arose out of the summary settlement and the Governor-General's letter of 10-10-1859, coupled with recognition of the status of taluqdar. Thus, if there was evidence before the Settlement Officer that Madho Prasad Singh had been recognised as a taluqdar, all claims against him or his successor would have to be summarily rejected even though no sanad was issued. In the present case there was such evidence available because, on the termination of the case of Seetal Prasad against Sheo Prakash the Settlement Officer had himself written on 7-8-1863, asking for a final decision as to whether the four Birhar Babus were taluqdars or not: see Ex. A-137/D. W. 1. In reply to this the Chief Commissioner ordered that the Birhar Babus should each receive a sanad: vide Ex. A-104. This decision was conveyed to the Settlement Officer by letter No. 2741 of the Chief Commissioner, dated 16-9-1863, which was on the Settlement Officer's file: vide Ex. A-148/D. W. 7. Thus, although sanads were actually not issued, the Settlement Officer was well aware that it had been ordered that they should issue and had consequently summarily rejected all claims. It is significant that Seetal Prasad's claim against Sheo Prakash was not rejected on the ground that it was barred by a sanad as it should have been if a sanad had been issued either at the Darbar of Lord Canning in 1859 or even on 9th November 1860. Exhibit A-67 is the only order on the record which was passed before the order of the Chief Commissioner directing the sanads to issue and it says nothing about any sanad. The subsequent orders of Settlement Officers are thus obviously based upon the Chief Commissioner's order conveyed in his letter No. 2741 dated 16th September 1863 when they say of any claim that it is barred by sanad. It may be noted in connection with Rubkars Akhir that, when the petition of Har Dutt Singh for the issue of a sanad was being considered in 1873 the Settlement Officer said:

"if a man's name is entered in the general list of taluqdars prepared under that Act he does not require a sanad" (vide Ex. A. 148/ D. W. 7.)

[91] The next set of documents are the papers relating to the preparation of lists under S. 8 of Act I of 1869 and the actual entry in those lists. Exhibit A-16 is a copy of an extract from a list of taluqdars not included in list II having or entitled to primogeniture sanads kept in the office of the Financial Commissioner. In this list the names of Madho Prasad Singh and the three other Birhar taluqdars are entered under the heading "16 Sanad Taluqdars" and there is only one name, that of Hakim Shafa-ul-daula, entered under the heading of taluqdars with whom summary settlement was made but who got no sanads. This entry does not tally with the entries contained in the lists prepared in the Deputy Commissioner's office of which Ex. 27 is a copy. In this latter list Kishen Prasad Singh is the only one of the four who is shown as having been granted a sanad. Then comes a heading "Taluqdars whose biswas have not been decided in the settlement department and consequently sanads not distributed." Under this heading, the name of Sheo Prakash Singh is entered and in the column of remarks it is stated "Vernacular sanad of Kishun Prasad Singh and Sheo Prakash Singh is the same, i. e., a joint sanad. The English sanad is in favour of Kishun Prasad Singh." There is also a heading "Taluqdars who have not received sanads" and the name of Madho Prasad Singh is entered under this heading. The name of Mahip Narain Singh is not entered at all.

[92] The original list is that prepared by the Deputy Commissioner according to the instructions contained in the Chief Commissioner's letter No. 158, dated 19th January 1869 to the Financial Commissioner. The Financial Commissioner with the assistance of Maharaja Man Singh was to revise the lists and Ex. A-16 is a copy of that list since we find that the lists eventually published tally with it: vide Exs. A-100, A-99 and A-82. It is, however, not difficult to understand how all the four Birhar Taluqdars came to be entered as sanad taluqdars because, although no sanad was in fact issued, orders had been passed by the Chief Commissioner as early as 1863 that sanads should issue to them and it was not thought proper to penalise them because of the failure of the authorities to carry out the orders of the Chief Commissioner. Moreover, the list was to contain the names not only of persons who had actually received sanads but also of those to whom sanads might be issued till the date fixed for the closing of the lists (vide S. 8 of Act I of 1869). Since orders had already been passed six years earlier that sanads should be granted the entry was made in anticipation of sanads being issued within the time limited. This view is also supported by the fact that though they are entered as Sanad Taluqdars, the date, language and nature of the sanad granted to them is not mentioned as it is in the case of every other taluqdar, including Kishen Prasad Singh, entered in this list: no sanads existed in the case of Madho Prasad, Sheo Prakash Singh and Mahip Narain Singh and so no particulars could be given.

[93] Mr. Wasim also wished to raise a presumption that a primogeniture sanad had been granted because the name of Madho Prasad Singh is entered in list III and S. 10 directs that a conclusive presumption shall be raised. We have discussed this matter in an earlier portion of this judgment and cannot agree with this contention. If the Act applies, the presumption is conclusive: if it does not apply there is no presumption at all: vide 31 I. A. 30.[1] In the present case there is no scope for any presumption as to the correctness of the entry by reason of the principle "omina præsumuntur rite esse acta" because evidence is available and this establishes that no sanad of any kind was granted to Madho Prasad Singh.

[94] The learned Additional Civil Judge has relied upon certain applications made by or on behalf of Jai Narain Singh for copies of sanads, as admissions that sanads were in fact granted. He has clearly erred in so construing the applications and Mr. Wasim has not attempted to support his reasoning. A consideration of all the evidence on the record establishes that no sanad, either joint or separate, either ordinary or primogeniture was granted to Madho Prasad Singh.

[95] Some reference was also made to the grant of a primogeniture sanad to Har Dutt Singh in 1874. There is no doubt that such a sanad was granted. Copies of it have been produced and they are Exs. A-126 and A-140. But the grant of this sanad is immaterial for this part of the case. If Har Dutt Singh was not the sole successor of Madho Prasad Singh the grant to him of a sanad relating to the property of others would give him no title : vide 3 I A. 259.[3] If, on the other hand, he was the sole successor of Har Dutt Singh then Act I of 1869 would govern succession and whether Har Dutt Singh had or had not a sanad would be wholly immaterial.

[96] We come then to a consideration of the question whether Madho Prasad Singh left any will by virtue of which Har Dutt alone succeeded to the property left by his father to the exclusion of his brothers. The document upon which reliance is placed as a will is Ex. A-8, a letter addressed by Madho Prasad Singh to the Chief Commissioner. The learned advocate for the appellant contends:

"(1) That Ex. A-8 is not a will at all, because.
(a) it has no reference to the death of the testator; and
(b) it only purports to state a custom and any one who gets the property would succeed under the supposed custom and not by virtue of any bequest contained in Ex. A-8.
(2) That, even if Ex. A-8 is held to be a will, it is invalid and cannot take effect, or be construed in such a way as, to confer title upon Har Dutt Singh alone, because
(a) it only expresses a wish that the estate should remain indivisible generation after generation according to the custom "of Raj ya Gaddi" and does not go further to bequeath the estate to any person or persons;
(b) the words "Raj" and "Gaddi" are of uncertain signification and do not necessarily mean succession by the eldest — they may mean the succession of the fittest, or tanistry. Hence the will fails for uncertainty under S. 89, Succession Act;
(c) the heirs-at-law cannot be excluded from inheritance by vague and uncertain words and Ex. A-8 does not exclude them either expressly or by necessary implication;
(d) Madho Prasad Singh must be taken to have been guided in his expression not by the views of the English authorities, but by his own notions as a Hindu. Consequently when he speaks of a custom of "Raj ya Gaddi" he is only referring to a joint Hindu family impartible estate in which all the members of the family retain an interest. Thus the bequest does not exclude other members of the family."

[97] The learned counsel for respondent 1 on the other hand, contends that, at the time Ex. A-8 was executed no technical rules of construction or rules relating to the manner in which the desires of the testator were to be expressed existed. The second proviso to S. 19 of Act I of 1869 makes it clear that even those sections of the Succession Act, which were made applicable by it to the wills of taluqdars, were not to be considered in judging wills executed before the commencement of ACT I of 1869. He, therefore, contends that, in determining whether EX. A-8 is a will, all that has to be ascertained is whether it amounts to a legal declaration of the intentions of the testator with regard to his property which he desired to be carried into effect after his death (see definition of "will" in S. 2 of ACT I of 1869). He urges that whatever may be said about such documents when executed by other persons they have, when read in the light of the enquiries to which they were replies, always been held by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee to be wills.

[98] Since one of the principles laid down for the interpretation of wills is that the terms of the document must be "read in the context in which they occur, and the circumstances in which the document came into existence" (vide 21 Luck. 463[26] at p. 487), we will first of all consider how EX. A-8 came into existence.

[99] On 18th January 1860, the Chief Commissioner of Oudh issued his Circular NO. 7/217 of 1860 to all Commissioners (EX. A-156/D. W. 7) in which he asked them to impress upon all taluqdars the desirability of single heir succession to their estates. In paragraph 3 it is stated:

"The Chief Commissioner thinks the objects we have in view may be attained if the present taluqdar who holds the property by gift of the British Government (for all estates are held by no other title in Oudh) were to file a written declaration expressing his desire that his estate should not be sub-divided at his death or in any future generation. The observance in all ages of this desire being inserted in the sanad as one of the conditions of the grants."

[100] With this circular in order to secure uniformity, the Commissioner enclosed a form which was to be used by the taluqdars as a sample for conveying their desires. This form was in the following terms:

"The British Government having conferred on me the full proprietary and hereditary rights in the Ilaqa of . . . . . It is my desire and will, that on my death, my Ilaqa descend entire by the rule that governs succession to landed property where there is a gaddi in the family. The younger brothers being supported by the head of the house."

[101] Copies of this Circular were sent to the Deputy Commissioners with direction to communicate their contents to all taluqdars and to send a translation of the sample declaration form to them (vide EX. A-7). Letters appear to have been issued in pursuance of this direction to, among others, Madho Prasad Singh, Kishen Prasad Singh and Sheo Prakash Singh, and their replies are EXS. A-8, A-158 and A-157, respectively. The learned advocate for the appellants concedes that EXS. A-158 and A-157, being in accordance with the sample sent may be treated as wills of taluqdars—they refer to the death of the writer and to the grant of guzara to the younger sons which indicates succession of the eldest son. He, however, contends that since EX. A-8 does not refer to the death of the taluqdar and does not say anything about maintenance of the younger sons, there is a deliberate departure from the sample and the document cannot be construed as a will in favour of the eldest son.

[102] At the time when EX. A-8 was written, neither Act X of 1865 nor Act I of 1869 had been enacted. There were thus no particular rules applicable to the wills of taluqdars. In the statement of "Objects and Reasons" attached to the Oudh Estates Bill of 1867 (which subsequently became the Oudh Estates Act of 1869) Mr. (later Sir) John Strachey stated:

"The unlimited power of disposing of their property by will having been given to the Taluqdars and wills being hardly known to the Hindu or Mahomedan, or local law acknowledged in Oudh, it has become a matter of great importance to provide by law how this power of bequest is to be exercised, and to afford some security that the real intentions of the testators shall be carried out."

In moving the Bill in the Governor-General's Council for making laws and regulations on 17th July 1867, Mr. Strachey elaborated his argument further by giving an example and he made it clear that even the oral expression of her wishes by a pardanashin lady made to a Tahsildar from behind the pardah amounted to a will as the law then stood.

[103] It is clear, therefore, that no particular form was required and all that it is necessary to ascertain is whether, having regard to the terms of the enquiry made from him, EX. A-8 was meant by Madho Prasad Singh to express his desires with regard to the devolution of his estate after his death. The circulars and the letters to which we have referred make it clear that that is what it was intended to ascertain from him and that he gave the reply, like other taluqdars with a view to having a condition inserted in sanad to be granted (or even granted) to him regulating succession. There was no question of his restricting his own powers and it is not contended that, by the letter Madho Prasad Singh intended to constitute himself the holder of a joint Hindu family impartible estate. The absence of reference to his death in specific words is, therefore, immaterial. That Madho Prasad Singh did not use the exact words of the sample makes no difference. He says that "I also wish that my illaqa may remain intact and indivisible generation after generation." The word "also" refers us back to the Circular and the letter which were sent to him and its signification is that he desired the estate to remain undivided when succession to him opened after his death as those two documents contemplated. We may also note that the authorities accepted this declaration, EX. A-8, as being tantamount to a declaration according to the sample : vide EXS. A-161, A-153, A-162 and A-10.

[104] In 3 I. A. 259,[3] in reply to the same Circular Raja Gauri Shankar of Maurawan wrote :

"I, Rajah Gouree Shunkur, —— do hereby declare that the British Government has conferred on me, in perpetuity, the proprietary right in the estate of Jubroulee etc., within the jurisdiction of Gosheen Gung Tehseel, and has asked for a statement regarding the custom of primogeniture, with a view that the estate may not be divided. In my family the custom for generations past has been that the eldest member of the family has been considered by all the sharers as the head to whom the other sharers in the family have been subject but at the same time have possessed their right to share in the estate. Any sharer wishing to have his share separated on any account, can do so under the custom of the family. The eldest member of the family, who is regarded as the chief, cannot, according to the custom of the family, transfer the estate to another, without consulting all the sharers in the family. I therefore wish that the custom which has hitherto prevailed in my family may be adhered to, and not that of a single member succeeding to the whole estate."

[105] The High Court, in a case instituted at Cawnpore, with regard to the property of the family outside Oudh, held that this document did not operate as a will. They said :

"We have no hesitation in assenting to the contention that neither the reply as to custom of primogeniture, nor the tabular statement which followed it, can be regarded as testamentary. They contain no devise, or bequest, nor any language from which a devise or bequest can be inferred."

And again :

"It cannot be supposed that in replying to the inquiries made by the Deputy Commissioner the talooqdars of Oudh set themselves to make their wills. It appears to us that the Raja Gouree Shunkur intended no more than to inform the authorities of the custom of inheritance prevailing in the family of which he was a member, and to indicate the persons interested as sharers of the family property. Moreover, whatever may have been the power of disposal of which the Rajah possessed over the property in Oudh, which point it is not necessary for us to determine, he neither had nor does it appear that he assumed to have, any power to dispose of the property in suit," that is, the property in the North-Western Provinces.

[106] Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee quote the above extracts from the judgment of the High Court and continue :

"These remarks were very appropriate in the case before the High Court in the Cawnpore case. It is clear that the documents had no reference to property in the North Western Provinces, and that they did not contain a bequest or testamentary disposition of any part of such property. But with regard to that part of the property in Oudh, to which they related, the case is very different. That which was not a will in the ordinary sense of the word, might in their Lordships' opinion, have amounted to a will within the definition of Act I of 1869. By S. 2 of that Act it is declared that the word 'will' means 'the legal declaration of the intention of the testator with respect to his property affected by this Act, which he desires to be carried into effect after his death.' It appears to their Lordships that the document of 14th February 1860, and the other documents which were very similar did declare the intention and wishes of Gouree Shunkur, which he wished to be carried into effect after his death with respect to all the estates which the Government had assumed to confer upon him by the sunnud etc. including that part which was ancestral, as well as that which was granted to him for the first time. Gouree Shunkur, as an honest and just man, and as a conscientious Hindu, did not wish that after his death the property which belonged to the family jointly should pass to his eldest son as his heir, and continue to descend according to the rules of primogeniture. He wished things to go on as before, and that that which had been joint family property should continue joint family property.

It appears, from the judgment of the Judicial Commissioner that documents, such as those which have been called the will of Rajah Gource Shunkur, have been treated and spoken of by the Talookdars of Oudh as their wills.

He says :

'In ordinary cases this could hardly be construed as a 'will' for there is no direct allusion to the death of the executor nor can it be said that there is a distinct direction as to the devolution of his property after his death.'

But in Oudh it is a matter of notoriety that the letter to which these documents are answers were expressly intended to elicit and register the wishes of each talookdar as to the bequest of his landed estate after his death, and the replies are to this day spoken of by talookdars as their will when no other has been made.

Its form is immaterial, as it was made prior to the passing of Act I of 1869, and the power of Hindus to make even nuncupatory wills has been decided in repeated judgments submitted by the Lords of the Privy Council.

I find that this document correctly describes the intention of the Rajah in respect to the devolution of his talooka after his death and that it is correctly described as a 'will'.

Their Lordships concur in his view.

[107] This decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee thus clearly negatives the arguments advanced by the appellant's learned advocate and supports the contention that EX. A-8 operates as a will of Madho Prasad Singh, and we accordingly hold it to be a will. Similar replies sent in answer to the same circular have also been held to be wills in 17 I. A. 82[27] and 65 I. A. 137[7] but the facts of those cases were different—the person who was to succeed was named quite apart from an indication of the succession being derived from a statement as to custom. Also see 14 O. C. 133[28] at p. 135.

[108] We come then to consider the construction to be placed on EX. A-8 and to ascertain whether it is possible to determine the legatee under it. With regard to the first point all that we need say is that, we are bound to hold in view of their Lordships' decision in 3 I. A. 259[3] that such a declaration made by a taluqdar in reply to Government enquiry as to custom operates as a will. Exhibit A-8 does not therefore fail as a will on the ground that it only expresses Madho Prasad Singh's views as to custom and does not go further.

[109] As to the argument that Ex. A-8 infringes the provisions of S. 89, Succession Act (corresponding to S. 76 of Act X of 1865) and there is no specific exclusion of the heir at law we must first of all point out that although by S. 19 of Act I of 1869, S. 76 of Act X of 1865 has been specifically made applicable to the wills of taluqdars, the second proviso contained in S. 19 states: "Provided also that nothing herein contained shall affect wills made before the passing of this Act." Thus S. 89 itself is inapplicable to the present case but that does not mean that the principle contained in it is not applicable as a general principle of law. If the will is framed in such uncertain language that it is not possible to determine in whose favour it operates it must fail. Before, however, it can be allowed to fail every effort must be made to ascertain in the legatee.

[110] The following passage to be found in Jarman on Wills, 7th edition, Vol. I, at page 428 is instructive:

"In the construction of wills" Mr. Jarman remarks, "the most unbounded indulgence has been shown to ignorance unskilfulness and negligence of testators: no degree of technical informality or of grammatical or orthographical errors: nor the most perplexing confusion in the collocation of words or sentences will deter the judicial expositor from diligently entering upon the task of eliciting from the contents of the instrument the intention of its author, the faintest traces of which will be sought out from every part of the will and the whole carefully weighed together, but if, after every endeavour he finds himself unable, in regard to any material fact, to penetrate through the obscurity in which the testator has involved his intention, the failure of the intended disposition is the inevitable consequence. Conjecture is not permitted to supply what the testator has failed to indicate for as the law has provided a definite successor in the absence of disposition it would be unjust to allow the right of this ascertained object to be superseded by the claim of any one not pointed out by the testator with equal distinctness. The principle of construction here referred to has found expression in the familiar phrase, that the heir is not to be disinherited unless by express words or necessary implication."

[111] Thus it is only if all attempts to discover the intention of the testator fail that the heir at law will succeed: vide also I. A. Sup. Vol. 47.[29] Further, although it is the words of the will which are primarily to be considered to ascertain the intention of the testator, his surroundings and the circumstances in which he came to execute the will may also legitimately be called in to assist in determining his meaning. The will was executed before 1869 and consequently S. 81, Succession Act (corresponding to S. 68 of Act X of 1865) cannot be applied. It is thus permissible to consider even extrinsic evidence to resolve a patent ambiguity and indeed extrinsic evidence—the correspondence with the Chief Commissioner—has been considered in 3 I. A. 259[3] and the other cases to which we have referred.

[112] In 6 M. I. A, 526[30] at pp. 550-551 their Lordships of the Judicial Committee say:

"The Hindoo law, no less than the English law, points to the intention as the element by which we are to be guided in determining the effect of a testamentary disposition nor, so far as we are aware, is there any difference between the one law and the other as to the materials from which the intention is to be collected. Primarily the words of the will are to be considered. They convey the expression of the testator's wishes, but the meaning to be attached to them may be affected by surrounding circumstances, and where this is the case those circumstances no doubt must be regarded. Amongst the circumstances thus to be regarded, is the law of the country under which the will is made and its dispositions are to be carried out. If that law has attached to particular words a particular meaning or to a particular disposition a particular effect, it must be assumed that the testator in the dispositions which he has made, had regard to that meaning or to that effect unless the language of the will or the surrounding circumstances displace that assumption."

In A. I. R. 1938 P. C. 228[31] at page 229, their Lordships reiterate this position and quote the words which we have quoted.

[113] We have already referred to several cases decided by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in which having regard to the fact that the letters in question were written in reply to a particular circular, their Lordships held them to be wills. If we consider Ex. A-8 in the same way, there can be no doubt that the testator in accepting the Government policy, desired the succession of his eldest son. Exhibits A-7 and A-156/D. W. 7 with the form attached and all the correspondence of the period relating to the grant to primogeniture sanads : vide Sykes' Compendium of Taluqdari Law, pages 82 et seq—indicate the great anxiety of the Chief Commissioner to prevent the division of Taluqas and to enforce the rule of primogeniture. It was in reply to these letters that Ex. A-8 was written and when Madho Prasad Singh writes that he also wished the custom of Raj Gaddi to be applicable to his estate he can only have meant that he agreed to the proposals made by the Chief Commissioner and desired the rule to which he referred to be applied to his estate. In the language of the time the word "Raj Gaddi" was held to connote the rule of primogeniture or the rule applicable to the "majorats" of continental Europe (vide Ex. A-154). Madho Prasad Singh was made aware of this signification by Exs. A-7 and A-156/D. W. 7 read with the sample declaration form. In accordance therefore, with the rule laid down in 6 M. I. A.

526,[30] when Madho Prasad Singh used the words "Raj Ya Gaddi" he must be taken to have meant the succession of his eldest son. It will not be out of place to remark that in paragraph 8 of the plaint the plaintiffs themselves stated that Babu Har Dutt Singh had been nominated as his successor by Madho Prasad Singh though it was added that he held the estate as head of a joint Hindu family. This is a position which had never been modified by any subsequent pleading.

[114] This was also the sense in which the authorities to whom EX. A-8 was addressed understood it: vide EX. A-161. In this document paragraph 3 mentions all the taluqdars who desired the custom of Raj Gaddi to prevail in their families: Madho Prasad Singh's name is among them. Out of this list only three are mentioned as desiring the rule of primogeniture not to be applicable: the Raja of Hussunpur and Meer Karamat Husain of Kutharia desired the most deserving to succeed and Mahip Narain Singh desired his second son to succeed. We have thus come to the conclusion that EX. A-8 operated as a bequest in favour of Har Dutt Singh.

[115] What we have already said would indicate that when he referred to the custom of Raj Ya Gaddi it was not to the customs applicable to Hindu joint family impartible estates that Madho Prasad Singh referred. He was the absolute owner of the property and possessed full rights of transfer in it freed from all the restraints imposed upon members of a joint Hindu family, and he was asked to elect for the succession of one member only—not a joint Hindu family—so that the property might be impartible for generation after generation. Moreover, as we shall presently show the rule of inheritance in his family was not controlled by any custom of impartibility though the normal position as in the case of many other Hindu families was that the family remained joint under one karta, unless disputes between them led to a partition. It cannot thus be said that Madho Prasad Singh desired to transform his estate into a Hindu joint family impartible estate by the use of the words "Raj Ya Gaddi", without any right of transfer being left to the holder as the Hindu law was then understood to be: vide 4 Mad. 250[32] at p. 267.

[116] Indeed on the basis of the absence of a custom of single heir succession the appellants' learned counsel advanced another argument derived from the Tagore case, I. A. Supp. Vol. 47,[29] in which it was laid down that a subject cannot create a line of inheritance not known to law and he contended that EX. A-8 even if it is treated as a will failed for this reason also. (See also 11 O. C. 256[33] upheld in 45 I. A. 134.[34]) In I. A. Supp. vol. 47[29] however, their Lordships at page 66 also laid down the proposition that, in such a case the first taker would get the estate "because the giver had at least that intention". If, therefore, it is held, as we have held, that a bequest to the eldest son was intended he would get the estate. In I. A. Supp. vol. 47[29] the first taker took only a life interest: in the present case there are no words to curtail the interest of the first taker and he accordingly gets an absolute estate.

[117] Har Dutt Singh thus became solely entitled to the estate left by his father and no one else had any interest in it. In this view of the case, it is not necessary for us to enter into a discussion of the rights of the holders of Hindu joint family impartible estate or of the cadets of the family. Had we, however, come to the conclusion that the bequest was to Har Dutt Singh as the head of a joint family with all the rights of the holder of an impartible estate we would have held in view of the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in 68 I. A. 155[35] at page 168, that whether the junior members were entitled to receive maintenance or not and even assuming that the holder had full powers of transfer and bequest the joint family was the owner of the property. If this had been so, Har Dutt Singh would not be sole owner of the property and consequently Act I of 1869 could not have been applied so as to divest rights which had already vested in the joint family.

[118] Since we have held that EX. A-8 is a will which operates in favour of Har Dutt Singh alone it follows that when Act I of 1869 came into force the person who would have been the heir under S. 22 of Act was the person actually in possession under an exclusive title. The effect of giving retrospective operation to the Act would therefore, not be to divest any title which had already vested in others. It might, however, be objected that, in view of the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the Mahewa case, 32 I. A. 203,[16] since the bequest came into operation before Act I of 1869 became law, Har Dutt Singh was not "legatee" within the meaning of the Act and consequently the Act did not govern succession to him. The facts of the Mahewa case,[16] were, however, very different because S. 14 of the Act was not applicable to it while it is applicable to the present case.

[119] Section 14 of Act I of 1869 as it then stood provided :

"If any Taluqdar or grantee shall heretofore have transferred or bequethed or if any Taluqdar or grantee or his heir or legatee shall hereafter transfer or bequeath the whole or any portion . . . . to a person who would have succeeded according to the provisions of this Act to the estate or to a portion thereof if the transferor or testator had died without having made the transfer and intestate the transferee or legatee and his heirs and legatees shall have the same rights and powers in regard to the property to which he or they may have become entitled under or by virtue of such transfer or bequest and shall hold the same subject to the same conditions and to the same rules of succession as the transferor or testator."

[120] It will be seen that if a bequest was made not by the taluqdar but by his heir before the commencement of Act I of 1869, S. 14 would not operate to place the legatee in the same position as the testator. In the Mahewa case[16] the man whose name was entered in the list prepared under S. 8 was Gajraj Singh, who died in January 1860 and was succeeded by his brother, Girwar. Girwar executed a will in favour of his nephew Balbhaddar and he also died in 1865. Thus, when the Act came into force the person in possession was not the legatee of a taluqdar but the legatee of the heir of a taluqdar. He could, therefore, not get the benefit of S. 14.

[121] In the present case Har Dutt Singh took under a bequest from the taluqdar himself and accordingly he held the estate subject to the same rules of succession as Madho Prasad Singh. By the retrospective operation of the Act the rule of succession to Madho Prasad Singh must be deemed to be that laid down in S. 22 of the Act: vide 65 I. A. 137.[7] In this view of the law also succession to Har Dutt Singh and his heirs must be held to be governed by S. 22 of Act I of 1869.

[122] In view of our finding that Act I of 1869 governs succession to the estate it is no longer necessary for us to determine whether any custom governs succession in the family for the purpose of ascertaining whether the Act applies or not or for finding out the heir to Narendra Bahadur Singh to the taluqadari estates. There is, however, also property which is admittedly not governed by Act I of 1869 and it is necessary for us, in order to find the heir to this property to determine whether the custom exists. Before proceeding to consider the evidence adduced by the parties, it is necessary for us to consider the pleadings since great emphasis has been placed upon them by the learned Additional Civil Judge as admission by the plaintiffs.

[123] The parties in particular the plaintiffs have changed their position considerably as the trial proceeded. When the case was before the revenue Courts in mutation proceedings Jai Narain Singh set up a custom under which the proprietor nominated his successor and in the absence of such nomination, the eldest member would succeed. He also claimed that he had been nominated and claimed succession on both grounds: vide EX. A-60. This position was modified in appeal and there he pleaded that the other members of the family were "co-owners" (vide EX. A-45). When the present suit was instituted he pleaded that B. Narendra Bahadur Singh was the last holder of the estate and he succeeded by survivorship as a member of the joint family with Narendra Bahadur Singh. He then, in paragraph 9 of the plaint, reiterated the position which he had adopted in EX. A-60.

[124] Babu Jai Narain Singh died before the suit had proceeded very far and there was a contest between the eldest son and the other two sons for substitution, the former claiming to be the sole heir of his father under custom and the latter claiming under the ordinary Hindu law. Finally the names of all the three sons were brought on record but each group reserved its rights for future determination. In September 1938, however, all the three substituted plaintiffs applied jointly for amendment of pleadings. This application was allowed by an order, dated 17th October 1938, and the pleadings were actually amended on 16th November 1938. These amendments are very material; two fresh paragraphs were added and the eighth paragraph (renumbered tenth) was considerably altered by the addition of the following words :

"....and plaintiff 1, Babu Parbhu Narain Singh, being the eldest son and otherwise suitable, has similarly succeeded to the rights of his father under the custom of impartibility and the rule of succession prevailing in the family and hereafter mentioned."

As a result of the seamendments the first relief claimed was a decree for possession in favour of Babu Parbhu Narain Singh alone, though in the alternative, possession was claimed for all the brothers. In the replication the plaintiffs maintained this position but they pleaded that their knowledge as to impartibility was based solely on a declaration by Babu Har Dutt Singh which the defendants characterised as a forgery. At the time of the oral pleadings, preceding the framing of issues, the plaintiffs completely abandoned any custom and relied upon the Hindu law "unchanged by any custom" though they allowed the plaint to remain unamended. Issues were framed on this basis and no issue was framed to try the question of the custom originally alleged by the plaintiffs.

[125] The appellants' learned advocate contends that the statements of Babu Jai Narain Singh are not admissions since the plaintiffs do not claim through him but as members of a joint Hindu family in their own right and that the original pleadings in this respect having been amended by the oral pleadings and the allegation as to custom having given up, those original pleadings cannot be considered at all. He also contended that, even if there was any admission by anyone, it was gratuitous and could always be—and has been—withdrawn since there are no circumstances in this case which would involve the application of the doctrine of estoppel. At the best, therefore, they are only pieces of evidence against the plaintiffs (vide S. 31, Evidence Act) and they have, in the present case, been shown to be wrong.

[126] There can be no doubt that, by their oral pleadings the plaintiffs change the whole basis of their title and the defendant might well have objected to their being allowed to do so but the defendants did not protest and the issues were framed on the basis of the altered pleadings. All that the oral pleadings amounted to was an abandonment of the plea as to custom which naturally let in the ordinary law. Indeed this is exactly what the defendants thought that the plaintiffs were doing and perhaps that is why they did not object. In the course of the proceedings on 23-2-1940, when defendant 1 wished to withdraw a statement made by his counsel earlier his learned advocate stated :

"I have the right to give up any plea or statement that was made orally and not in the written statement of defendant 1 in the same way as the plaintiffs have orally given up certain pleas taken in their plaint."

Leaving out of consideration for the time being the statements made in the course of mutation proceedings, we must take the pleadings in the case as they stand and leave out of consideration the pleadings as they stood before the amendment. It is too late a stage for the defendants to object to the new pleas. In A. I. R. 1930 P. C. 205[36] at p. 208 their Lordships laid down the proposition that if a case is embodied in an issue, absence of a plea in the plaint is immaterial. In the present case it was the reverse and a plea contained in the plaint was not embodied in any issue. Apart, therefore, from the specific statement contained in the oral pleadings, it must be deemed to have been given up.

[127] As to the statements made in the cas of mutation proceedings the position is different. The plaintiffs' cannot say that they are not statements made by their predecessor-in-interest because in this suit, the plaintiffs have come in only as the legal representatives of Jai Narain and any statements made by Jai Narain Singh were as much admissible against them, as they would have been against Jai Narain himself were he alive, and they have the same value—vide note 16 to O. XXII, R. 3 contained in Chitaley's Commentary on the Code of Civil Procedure which summarises the authorities. Very little vlaue can, however, be attached to all these statements of the plaintiffs and of Jai Narain, since it is apparent that they did not have any scruples in changing their pleadings so as to suit the exigencies of their case : 63 I. A. 397[37] at p. 403. They are nevertheless statements which must be weighed with other evidence in determining whether any family custom exists.

[128] We will next consider the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in 23 I. A. 147[38] on which the learned counsel for respondent 1, greatly relied because it provides a valuable guide on the question of custom in the present case. In the case one Bhairon, produced a book containing the genealogy of the Umargarh family "which professes to show the heads of the family and some younger sons for 27 generations." Their Lordships set out the last six steps in this pedigree in their judgment. In these six steps there were three cases in which the last holder left only one son and three in which he left more than one son. In that case their Lordships relied upon the following facts in holding the custom established (a) The family property has never been the subject of partition, (b) the heads of it ascertained by primogeniture had been installed on the Gaddi with public ceremonies, (c) a claim for partition made by a younger son was resisted and defeated and thereafter the property in suit was enjoyed by the head of the family as sole owner, (d) all the members of the family, with the exception of the actual claimants to partition, and a substantial body of kinsfolk deposed to custom and (e) there was no substantial evidence in rebuttal. Mr. Wasim contends that all the above kinds of evidence are present in this case also. It will, therefors, be convenient to divide the evidence produced in this case under the same heads as those under which their Lordships divided it in that case.

[129] The first and most important point which arises for our consideration is whether any inference can be drawn from the paucity of divisions of the estate during the course of some 25 generations. Before we come to consider the facts bearing on this part of the case it will be as well to review some of the rules which their Lordships of the Judicial Committee have laid down for the determination of the question of custom. These rules have so often and so clearly been enunciated that it is not necessary for us to consider them in any detail : we will content ourselves by referring to a few only of the pronouncements of their Lordships.

[130] In 55 I. A. 45,[39] in which their Lordships held that descent of an estate without division for five generations over a period of 67 years was not enough to establish such a custom, they say at pages 48 and 49 :

"There are certain propositions of law by reference to which this case must be decided, and their Lordships consider that they can all be taken as well settled.

(a) When there is a dispute with respect to an estate being impartible or otherwise the onus lies on the party who alleges the existence of a custom different from the ordinary law of inheritance according to which custom the estate is to be held by a single member and, as such not liable to partition. In order to establish that any estate is impartible, it must be proved that it is from its nature impartible and descendible to a single person, or that it is impartible and descendible by virtue of a special custom.

(b) Any such special custom modifying the ordinary law of succession must be ancient and inveriable and must be established to be so by clear and unambiguous evidence. To use the words of James L.J. in 13 M. I. A. 542[40] at p. 549 : 'The custom must be proved by something like what we should call in this country immemorial usage. It is a thing which cannot be predicated of a simple and single estate, the title to which dates from comparatively a short period of time back.'

"(c) That if an impartible estate existed as such from before the advent of British rule, any settlement or re-grant thereof by the British Government must, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, and unless inconsistent with the express terms of the new settlement, be presumed to continue the estate with its previous incidents of impartibility and succession by special custom."

See also I. A. Supp. Vol. 1[41] at p. 3 and 3 I. A. 259[3] at p. 285.

[131] In 45 I. A. 10[42] in which a custom of exclusion of daughters was under consideration their Lordships say at page 19 :

"In every case of this kind the burden of proof lies heavily upon the plaintiff and though his evidence may consist of a number of striking instances in support of his case, it receives a severe blow when prominent members of the families concerned deny that the custom exists."

Accordingly they held that, although several instances of the exclusion of daughters were proved they were referrable to other causes and did not substantiate the plea of custom.

[132] In the same case, however, their Lordships relax the strict rule of English law relating to proof of antiquity. At page 14 they say :

"Their Lordships have carefully considered the difficulty of applying all the strict rules that govern the establishment of custom in this country to circumstances which find no analogy here. Custom binding inheritance in a particular family has long been recognized in India (see 12 M. I. A. 81[43]) although such a custom is unknown to the law of this country, and is foreign to its spirit."

[133] In the recent case in 68 I. A. 1[44] their Lordships follow the principles laid down by them in 45 I. A. 10[42] and at pages 30 and 31, they say :

" Their Lordships are not convinced that Young C. J.'s reference to the English rule, stated in Blackstone's Commentaries, that 'a custom, in order that it may be legal and binding, must have been used so long that the memory of man runneth not to the contrary' was either apposite or useful, when applied to Indian conditions. It is undoubted that a custom observed in a particular district derives its force from the fact that it has, from long usage, obtained in that district the force of law. It must be ancient; but it is not of the essence of this rule that its antiquity must in every case be carried back to a period beyond the memory of man-still less, that it is ancient in the English technical sense. It will depend upon the circumstances of each case what antiquity must be established before the custom can be accepted. What is necessary to be proved is that the usage has been acted upon in practice for such a long period and with such invariability as to show that it has, by common consent, been submitted to as the established governing rule of the particular district. Having regard to the circumstances under which local customs have arisen, and do arise in India, both with reference to Muslims and Hindus and the case and frequency with which people migrate from one district or Province to another it would, in their Lordships' opinion, create great perplexity in the already uncertain character of customary law to require that, in every case, the antiquity of a custom must be carried back to a period which is beyond the memory of man."

[134] While insisting on the invariability of the custom their Lordships say, at page 30 that the custom as contained in the riwaj-i-am would not be overruled by recent instances in which it had not been observed. Similarly in 41 I. A. 275,[45] 43 I. A. 269,[10] 55 I. A. 303[14] it has been laid down that an occasional departure from custom will not negative the custom. The appellant's learned advocate urges that, in the last two cases, it was so held because the estates were entered in list II of the lists prepared under S. 8 of Act 1 of 1869 and that section provides that list II was to be a list of persons whose estates "ordinarily" as distinct from "invariably" devolved upon a single heir. He relied upon the decision of the Judicial Committee in 1 Cal. 186[46] for the proposition that even one departure from custom terminated the custom, so that, in the present case, even if such a custom had existed it came to an end on a partition occurring.

[135] In 1 Cal. 186[46] their Lordships say at pages 188 and 189,

"there is, undoubtedly, evidence which leads reasonably to the belief that, formerly, the estate was held, from time to time, by individual male members of the family; but the evidence leaves in obscurity the character and nature of the estate, and the tenure by which it was held under Mahomedan rule."

Their Lordships then refer to certain firmans of the Emperors under which successive holders came into possession and quote an extract from the judgment of the High Court in which the following passage occurs :

" This succession, however, was not regulated by any family custom, but by the will of the sovereign power."

Their Lordships state facts which show that it was not only one instance in which the custom was departed from but there were several such instances, the first being that on which stress is laid by the appellants' learned advocate. Their Lordships then say at pages 194 and 195:

" It has already been stated that the acts of Bishonath and his brothers, on his father's death, afford strong ground for the belief that they did not regard the manner of succession, if it ever prevailed, in the light of a family custom, but as an incident or condition of tenure which had been determined by the settlement and consequently assumed that thenceforth the succession would conform to the ordinary law. Their conduct, indeed, goes far to disprove that a family custom, properly so called, ever existed; but assuming it to have once existed, their Lordships think it was of a nature which could, without any violation of law, be put an end to, and that it was, in fact discontinued."

The facts of the case clearly show that the decision of their Lordships was based on the facts that, at one stage in the succession, all the members of the family agreed to take according to ordinary law, unaffected by custom, and thereafter the devolution of property was according to that law.

[136] While, therefore, it is true that an occasional deviation will not affect the invariability of the custom, the Court must find that there is other evidence to justify it in holding that there exists a well-established custom and in considering whether any such custom has, in fact, been established, the deviations must receive due consideration:vide 1945 O. W. N. 267.[47]

[137] In 5 M. I. A. 169[48] it was held that proof that an estate had descended undivided for eight generations in three or four of which there could have been a partition but it did not take place leads to an inference that the estate is governed by a custom of single heir succession. At page 186 their Lordships say:

"One very remarkable case is this, that Rawat Kurn Rai having adopted a son, that son proceeded to deal with the property as an undivided estate, and excluded an afterborn natural son of Rawat Kurn Rai."

[138] In 1 I. A. 1[49] on the other hand there had been no division for six or seven generations though there had been partitions earlier. Their Lordships at page 8 say:

"In the present case, there was no evidence of enjoyment by a single member of the family during six or seven generations; all that was found was that during that period the estate had never been divided. That fact alone cannot control the operation of the ordinary rule of Hindu law, or deprive the parties, if members of a joint and undivided family, of the right to demand a partition when they are so minded."

[139] In 27 I. A. 238[50] at p. 241 also their Lordships placed emphasis upon a custom of Gaddinashini and they also relied upon proof of a similar custom in allied branches of the same family.

[140] In 41 I. A. 275[45] at P. 287 it was laid down that custom may be established by "general evidence" of exclusion of females, even though there may have been very few occasions for its actual enforcement. In that case a custom by which females were excluded from inheriting to males who died in a state of jointness was extended to exclude females from succeeding to property left by separated males.

[141] Coming now to a consideration of the evidence adduced by the parties in the light of the above principles the first thing that attracts our attention is the history of the acquisition and devolution of the property in the light of the family pedigree. Patraj Deo, it is agreed, was the founder of the family fortunes and it is not disputed that, on his death, the estate which he left was divided among all his sons. He and his sons were, therefore, not subject to any custom of single heir succession. Thereafter five steps intervened between Nar Singh Deo, with whose branch we are concerned and Ram Deo, each represented by a single son. Even if we were to assume with respondent 1 that there was more than one son at each step and still the property remained undivided this period of time would not be sufficient to establish a well-recognised custom of impartibility. Thus when Gohraj Deo laid the foundations of the present Birhar estates he was not subject to any custom of single heir succession which he might have brought with him, even supposing such a thing were possible in the case of a custom not governing succession to all the property of the family but only attaching to a particular estate in that family. It is by no means clear that Gohraj Deo himself acquired the whole estate—there is evidence to show that he and his descendants built it up—but again assuming with respondent 1 that the estate had come into existence in the time of Gohraj Deo, we are confronted with the fact that for the next nine generations the family was maintained by only one son at each step. The non-partition of the estate would, therefore, not be due to any custom but to the law 'since in the presence of the son no one else could succeed.

[142] In order to meet this objection the learned counsel for respondent 1 contends that the pedigree is not complete since it only traces the descent of the property and consequently gives the names only of those persons who held the estate. He further urges that it is impossible to believe that for so many generations there should be only one son in the family and he relied upon the following remarks of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in 48 Cal. 997[51] at p. 1018:

"The judgment" (of the Judicial Commissioner) "omits from consideration in the appraisement of the case the existense of the family as an entity through so many centuries which could only survive destruction and disintegration with the help of such a family custom."

[143] In that case, however, as well as in 23 I. A. 147[38] the evidence showed that there were younger sons who had only received maintenance while the head of the family obtained the whole estate and that, at one stage, when a dispute arose between three brothers as to succession and the property was divided the villages which "belong to the Raj" were left undivided and were assigned to the eldest son. In the present case, it is not a fact that only those who held the estate are shown: the younger sons of of Patraj Deo, Ram Deo and Bharat Deo, who did not hold the estate and lived before the estate was acquired are all shown and even some steps in pedigree of Har Deo are shown. The fact that the descendants of those branches of the family exist is also indicated, though the whole pedigree of those descendants is not given. Coming down to later times, even the descendants of Mani Ram and Horal Singh are also shown. Thus whenever there existed another branch of the family it is indicated though the pedigree of that branch is not given (vide EX. A-20.) If there had in fact been any descendants of Gohraj Deo in lines other than those shown in EX. A-20 it should not have been difficult for respondent 1 to produce evidence on this point. He did, in fact, produce a body of witnesses on the question of custom, who claimed to be Palwars, but all of them claim either that Patraj Deo or Rahman Sah was the common ancestor: none of them claims descent from any intermediate common ancestor between Gohraj Deo and Rahman Sah. Moreover, we must remember that the period during which Gohraj Deo and his descendants up to Rahman Sah lived was before the reign of the Emperor Akbar, when every petty family had to maintain its possessions by force of arms and the scions of the family had, like the Barons of medieval Europe, to lead the forces of the family to battle. It is not at all surprising, therefore, to find that many families of warrior chieftains exhausted themselves, nor is it surprising that such of those families as continued to exist would have very few male members left to them. This is not pure surmise or conjecture on our part but is borne out by history and, in the case of this very family, in its lower steps, we find the same forces at work at a later time when there was a weak sovereign power. Thus EX. A-20 shows that, in Ain Singh's branch, though there were cadets, they all exhausted themselves, having been killed in fighting as the Fyzabad Settlement Report in paragraph 566 at pages 201 and 202 tells us, until in six generations only the branch of Munna Singh survived. Similarly in Lashkar Singh's branch through 6 generations only Sheo Parkash Singh and his brothers, and Mahip Narain Singh survived at the time of annexation.

[144] It must be remembered that the burden of proof rests heavily on the plaintiffs to prove custom and that this burden cannot be discharged by the production of ambiguous evidence. In the present case the utmost that can be said with regard to succession down to Rahman Sah is that it might be due to custom: on the other hand, it might equally have been in accordance with law. Such evidence is not sufficient to prove custom, particularly when it is considered in the light of what followed.

[145] We have a detailed account of the succession to the family property in the last nine generations and this is wholly inconsistent with the alleged custom. From Rahman Sah in the direct line to Madho Prasad Singh there are nine steps in the succession, in four of these there was an only son, in three, viz., between Bali Ram and Mani Ram, Ain Singh and Lashkar Singh, and Madho Prasad Singh and Kishen Prasad Singh, the estate was divided. In the remaining two there was no partition. Out of these two in the first instance there were only two brothers, of whom one died childless and in the second there were four brothers of whom two were childless, and third left two sons both of whom were childless and only one survived and left descendants. There are indications in the evidence that as a matter of fact these four brothers and their children died in a state of jointness: vide EXS. 2, 3. The branch of Lashkar Singh reveals a similar state of affairs. It certainly cannot be said that the property of the family has passed undivided through a long period of years extending over centuries. Rather the evidence shows that it had always been divided whenever there were more sons than one.

[146] The learned Additional Civil Judge has assumed, as the learned counsel for respondent 1 wishes us to assume, that the divisions were not brought about under the law but by extraneous causes, chiefly force. We may note at once that there is no evidence on record to support this contention. The learned Additional Civil Judge has placed great reliance on the misgovernment which prevailed in Oudh during the last years of the Oudh monarchy but he has omitted altogether from consideration the fact that the first two partitions, those between Bali Ram and Mani Ram and between Ain Singh and Lashkar Singh, took place at the height of the Moghul power when law and order were rigidly enforced. The fact that, at the break up of the Moghul Empire, the descendants of Bali Ram once more seized the property in the hands of the descendants of Mani Ram would not nullify the effect of the partition. At such a time partitions of family property could not have been effected by force. Moreover, it would be surprising if force caused a division of the estates in exactly the shares to which the parties would be entitled under the law. The third partition took place just before the annexation when, undoubtedly, disorders prevailed but the evidence on the record establishes that it was amicably done and equal shares were allotted to each brother practically in each village: vide Exs. A-20, A-2 and 138.

[147] Succession to the estate of Birhar since the annexation of Oudh is no evidence either for or against custom, since succession has been under the rule laid down in S. 22 of Act I of 1869 to a single heir. Kishen Prasad Singh, Mahip Narain Singh and Sheo Prakash Singh were all alive when Act I of 1869 came into force and that Act was undoubtedly applicable. Even with regard to the branch of Madho Prasad Singh, before the present suit, it was understood by all concerned that the Act applied and that Har Dutt Singh and Narendra Bahadur Singh were Taluqdars: vide Exs. A-16, A-100, A-99, A-82, A-147, A-126/D. W. 3, A-17, A-18, A-106, A-90, A-42, A-160, A-45 and page 91 of the Fyzabad Gazetteer. Thus the evidence relating to the succession of Har Dutt Singh and Narendra Bahadur Singh, one after the other, as sole owners has no bearing on the question of custom. We may note, however, that, in the branch of Kishen Prasad Singh, the descent is confined to a single line since there is only one line in existence; but that both Sheo Prakash Singh and Mahip Narain Singh divided their estates which were split up into several fragments.

[148] Thus, in the present case, the course of descent of the properties through generations negatives the alleged custom but we still have to consider whether the actions and statements of the members of the family are such as to lead to an inference that they believed in the existence of such a custom.

[149] Respondent 1's learned counsel contends that the conduct of all the principal members of the family at the time of the first regular settlement, when titles were being enquired into and the rights of Taluqdars and others were being finally determined, leads to the inference that they were convinced of the existence of such a custom in the family.

[150] The second summary settlement of the various portions in their possession were made with Madho Prasad Singh, Kishen Prasad Singh, Sheo Prakash Singh and Mahip Narain Singh, Exs. A-1, 20, 22 and 23. At the same time, however, on the 15th January 1859, an order was passed directing the entry of the name of Sital Prasad Singh, younger brother of Sheo Prakash Singh in respect of a 1/3rd pattidari share (vide Ex. A-47). Thereafter, on 21st January 1859, Sital Prasad Singh applied for partition of his share (Ex. 48). Sheo Prakash Singh denied the claim (vide Ex. 49), and opposed partition, but, on 28th February 1859, the three brothers entered into an agreement to divide the property, through the intervention of arbitrators, into three equal shares (Ex. 50). Nothing happened in pursuance of this agreement and it seems that Sheo Prakash Singh began interfering with Sital Prasad Singh who again applied on 11th September 1860, asking that Sheo Prakash Singh should be directed not to interfere with his collections. In the meanwhile the Governor-General's letter, dated the 10th October 1859, conferring title on Taluqdars with whom summary settlement had been made, had been issued and Sheo Prakash Singh opposed all claims made by his brother and the Tahsildar supported his opposition on the basis of that letter : vide Exs. A-72, A-73, A 74 and A-68. The matter was entrusted to Raja Rustam Sahi, Taluqdar of Dera, who held the post of Honorary Assistant Commissioner, for disposal by an order dated 22nd October 1860, (vide Ex. 51). The Raja held an enquiry and called for statements from all persons who could be expected to know. Both Kishen Prasad Singh and Mahip Narain Singh wrote letters (vide Exs. 56 & 55) saying that all the three brothers were entitled to the property but they lived jointly and there was no disunity among them. Raja Rastam Sahi, being well aware that the Chief Commissioner attached great importance to the enforcement of the rule of single heir succession (vide Exs. A-7. A-156/D. W-7 etc.) thereupon directed that "this rubkar be sent to the Deputy Commissioner, Fyzabad, for the purpose of informing him of the present custom prevailing in the family of the parties and it be submitted that the family custom of the parties being such Your Honour might inform them of your views in respect thereof ....." (Ex. 51)

[151] The Deputy Commissioner was not satisfied with this and on 20th August 1861, he returned the case for further report on, among other things, the custom prevailing in the family (vide Ex.52). Thereupon Raja Rustam Sahi reported: "Now from the handwriting of the said Babus and neighbouring Taluqdars and looking (at) the papers of the misil (it) is clearly known that the family custom of this Taluqa depends upon distribution," and he proceeds to give instances of divisions but he says that, although all the members of the family are co-sharers, the kabuliat has always been executed by one member only and so the arrangments made by the Chief Commissioner (i. e. the effecting of the settlement with one member) should not be disturbed (vide Ex. 57 dated 16th January, 1862). This order was interpreted as awarding 1/3rd to each of the brothers and it was concurred in by Mr. Bradford the Settlement officer, but on appeal the Commissioner and the Chief Commissioner held the claim barred by time. The claim was left, by an order dated 6th September 1882, to the Settlement Officer for final disposal (vide EX. A-66).

[152] When the regular settlement operations began, the case was again taken up by the Settlement Officer Mr. Carnegy, who recorded the evidence of the parties and other members of the family (vide EX. A-66) and finally held that the Gaddi System had always been the rule applicable to this estate and he accordingly dismissed the claim of Sital Prasad except to the villages of which he had been in possession as maintenance holder: vide EX. A-67.

[153] It will appear that, so long as the matter was before a brother Taluqdar, all the members of the family except Sheo Prakash Singh deposed to succession according to Hindu Law and against any custom of impartibility. This was not in accordance with the views of the authorities (see the Introduction to Sykes Compendium of Taluqdari Law, page 81 et. seq.) and a decision on those lines was not accepted by them. When, therefore, the case came back and the other Taluqdars of the family learnt that their own recognition as Taluqdars depended on the result of these enquiries (vide EX. A-66), they acceded to the wishes of the authorities and deposed to the custom of single heir succession. No value can be attached to the statements made by the four Birhar Babus in such circumstances before the Settlement Officer.

[154] The learned advocate for the appellants has argued that these statements are inadmissible in evidence because they were made after the controversy had arisen, vide S. 32 (4), Evidence Act. Mr. Wasim, on the other hand, relied upon Ss. 48 and 49 of that Act for their admission and he sought support for his argument in 52 I. A. 379,[52] 8 O. W. N. 6[53] at pp. 15 and 16 and 1939 O. W. N. 157[54] at p. 162. These authorities are, however, of no assistance to him. They were cases in which the persons expressing the opinions had come into the witness box to depose to them. Sections 48 and 49, Evidence Act, do not deal with the statements of dead persons or persons who cannot be found. Such cases are dealt with by S. 32. In 27 I. A. 238[50] at p. 251, their Lordships of the Judicial Committee held :

"By section 49 when the Court has to form an opinion or (inter alia) the usages of any family, the opinions of persons having special means of knowledge thereon are relevant. By S. 60, if oral evidence refers to an opinion or the grounds on which that opinion is held, it must be the evidence of the person who holds that opinion on these grounds."

See also 8 Luck. 445[65] at p. 461. The record of the depositions of Har Dutt Singh, Mahip Narain Singh, Sheo Prakash Singh and Kishen Prasad Singh contained in EX. A-66 is thus not admissible in evidence. In any case, even if they are admissible, they are of no value.

[155] One more fact in connection with the conduct of those persons must be borne in mind and that is that, when the lists came to be prepared under S. 8 of Act I of 1869 the names of all the four Birhar Taluqdars, as well as those of the two Taluqdars in Har Har Deo's branch, namely, the owners of the Tigra and Murhera Taluqdars (vide Pedigree attached to the Fyzabad Settlement Report opposite page 201) were entered in list III and not in list II, the latter being a list of those Taluqdars in whose families succession was governed by a custom of single heir succession. This is all the more significant when it is realised that these lists were prepared in consultation with the Taluqdars and each Taluqdar could choose the list in which he desired his name to be entered.

[156] In his letter NO. 158 dated 19th January 1869, the Chief Commissioner wrote to the Financial Commissioner, in para 7 as follows:

"Great care must be taken in ascertaining the wishes of the persons whose names are entered in the lists in regard to the lists in which they desire their names to be entered. As names can only be changed from one to the other to correct a bona fide mistake: the election shall be final."

See 18 O. C. 289[66] at p. 318. We have no reason to suppose that the Financial Commissioner and the Deputy Commissioner did not carry out their duties in respect of such an important matter properly; particularly when we find that in the Gangwal Case, 5 O. W. N. 299,[20] after the lists had actually been prepared the following letter was sent to the Taluqdar :

"My dear Raja Sitla Baksh Singh, Taluqdar of Gangwal Estate.

According to Act I of 1869 relating to estates in Oudh, the lists of Taluqdars being appendices 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6 having been prepared under S. 8, have been sent for sanction and publication in the Gazette and your name has been shown in lists I and II. Hence you are hereby informed that if you have any objection you should try early. Be it known that the lists can be corrected so long as they are in the office of the Financial Commissioner but as soon as the order for publication in the Gazette is passed by the Chief Commissioner correction will be impossible. The reply is awaited by return of post."

[157] The fact that, in spite of all the efforts to ascertain the wishes of the Taluqdars in this respect the Birhar Babus chose list III and not list II is very significant and indicates that, at that time at least they were not conscious of a well ascertained family custom of single heir succession. Thus, the conduct of the principal members of the family is also inconsistent with the existence of a family custom of single heir succession.

[158] The next fact upon which Mr. Wasim relied was that partition had been demanded by Sital Prasad Singh during the course of the first regular settlement operations and refused

We have already seen the circumstances in which the demand was refused: the parties had actually agreed to an equal division when the letter of the 10th October 1859 came to be known. Thereafter Sheo Prakash Singh refused to accede to the demand for a partition and his sole title was upheld by the officers, who were most desirous of preventing division of Taluqas. Not much importance can be attached to such a refusal of partition as evidencing a well-recognised rule of single heir succession.

[159] Reliance was then placed by defendant 1 upon the custom of Gaddinashini. The only evidence on this point relates to the installation of Narendra Bahadur Singh on the Gaddi and to the holding of Darbars by him at Dasehra and Holi. We are not told whether any such custom existed in any earlier generation or whether it exists in any of the other branches. With regard to Narendra Bahadur Singh, it was rightly or wrongly, recognised on all hands, that he was a Taluqdar entitled to succeed to the exclusion of all others and it is not surprising that he was installed on the Gaddi as such and held Court thereafter twice a year, on occasions of ceremony. From proof of Gaddinashini on one occasion, namely, when Narendra Bahadur Singh succeeded a long-established custom of Gaddi cannot be inferred.

[160] Respondent 1 also referred to the evidence of D. W. 10 Bhawani Bakhsh Singh, D. W. 11, Man Bahal Singh, D. W. 12, Bindeshwari Bakhsh Singh D. W. 13, Bhola Singh, D. W. 14 Janki Prasad Singh, D. W. 16 Badri Prasad Singh, D. W. 17 Basdeo Singh, D. W. 18, Rudra Bahadur Singh D. W. 19, Baz Bahadur Singh, D. W. 26, Inder Dutt Singh, D. W. 28 Lal Hari Har Saran Singh and D. W. 29, Bhagwati Prasad Singh, in support of his plea of custom. This evidence has been carefully examined by the learned Additional Civil Judge, who himself recorded it and it has been found by him to be unworthy of credit. He has, however, relied upon it for what it is worth, since it is according to him in conformity with the inferences which he has drawn from the documentary evidence and the admissions contained in the pleadings. We have examined this evidence and have come to the conclusion that the criticisms of the learned Additional Civil Judge, which we will not repeat, are fully justified and that this evidence is of no value.

[161] On a consideration of all the evidence we have come to the conclusion that the alleged custom of single heir succession has not been established. The question whether succession is by the rule of male lineal primogeniture or whether the nearer heir excludes the more remote, therefore, does not arise.

[162] This brings us to the question whether Narendra Bahadur Singh was, at the time of his death, a member of a joint Hindu family with Jai Narain Singh, the present plaintiff, defendant 1 and Rajendra Mohan Singh, or whether he had separated from them or had, at least, excluded them for over 12 years from possession. If separation or ouster is proved neither the plaintiffs nor defendant 1 has any title to the non-Taluqdari property during the lifetime of the widow, defendant 1. On the other hand, if jointness is established and it is not shown that there was any exclusion then the plaintiffs and defendant 1 will share the immovable property half and half. The movable properties would, as we shall presently show, even in this eventuality, go to the widow. In the present suit, there has at no stage been any controversy between the defendants inter se, though each of them has put forward his or her title to defeat the plaintiffs' claim. The disputes between the two defendants were settled by a compromise but the validity of this compromise has been challenged and is the subject of a separate litigation between the defendants. Whatever we may say in the course of this judgment will not affect that litigation or any further litigation that may arise between the two defendants nor will the rights of Rajendra Mohan Singh or of the descendants of Gopal Saran Singh, if they have any, be affected by these proceedings since they are no parties to them.

[163] On the question of jointness or separation the pleadings of the plaintiffs and defendant 1 have undergone a change during the course of the suit. In the initial stages Jai Narain Singh and, after his death the plaintiffs claimed the whole estate on, among others, the ground that Jai Narain Singh and they had been joint with Narendra Bahadur Singh while Inder Bikram Singh and his sons had not. Thus a partial separation was alleged. Later, in the proceedings of 27th January 1939, their learned advocate stated that he "does not allege 'that Inder Bikram Singh or his sons separated from the rest of family.' The counsel for respondent 1, on the other hand, stated in the proceedings of the same date that "Inder Bikram Singh ..... was on excellent terms with Narendra Bahadur Singh, was living with him and was supported by him and treated as a member of a joint Hindu family." Later, however, he applied to withdraw this statement vide proceedings of the 22nd to 26th February 1940. As remarked by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in A. I. R. 1938 P. C. 189[67] at p. 190 no importance can be attached to such a pleadings.

[164] The appellants' learned advocate, however, objects that his clients have been seriously prejudiced by the change in attitude of defendant 1 after plaintiffs had closed their evidence and contends that he ought not to be allowed to withdraw his previous statement which clearly showed that there was a joint family in existence though the composition of that family was in dispute. His objection on this point is without any real foundation because defendant 2 had all along alleged the separation of Narendra Bahadur Singh from all the other members of the family and the real contest on the question of jointness and separation, on the assumption that the Act did not apply and that there was no custom of single heir succession, was between the plaintiffs and defendant 1 on one side and defendant 2 on the other though, if the compromise between the two defendants is upheld, defendant 1 could also claim under defendant 2. The plaintiffs were thus all along aware that they had to meet this case and they have not been prejudiced.

[165] The rules as to what constitutes separation in the case of an ordinary joint Hindu family are well settled. In 59 I. A. 331[58] their Lordships of the Judicial Committee summarise the position in the following words :

"Generally speaking the normal condition of every Hindu family is joint. Presumably every such family is joint in food, worship and estate. In the absence of proof of division such is the legal presumption': Tipperaha Case (12 M. I. A. 523[59] at p. 540). Separation from commensality and joint worship does not necessarily effect a division of a joint undivided Hindu family. Such a separation may be due to various causes, and the family may yet continue joint in estate: 40 I. A. 40[60] at p. 46. To constitute separation there must be a clear and unambiguous declaration by a member of his intention to separate himself from the family : 43 I. A.151[61] at p. 158 ; 44 I. A. 159.[62]"

[166] It is also settled law that it is not necessary that all the parties should agree to a separation: "the status of the plaintiff as separate in estate is brought about by his assertion of his right to separate" : vide 44 I. A. 159[62] at p. 161, 58 I. A. 220[63] at p. 224, 49 I. A. 168[64] and 27 O. C. 114[65] at p. 117. See also Mulla's Hindu Law, paragraph 325.

[167] In A. I. R. 1938 P. C. 189[67] at p. 190 it was said :

"It is by no means a rare thing that a person makes a statement that he is a member of a joint family with his relative, but has reasons of his own for making that statement. It is not his statement but his actings and dealings with the estate, which furnish a true guide to the determination of the question of the jointness or otherwise ..... There is no proof of actual partition of the joint estate at any time but there is no doubt that there can be a partition of the joint property without an actual division of the property by metes and bounds." vide also 1 I. A. 9.[66]

[168] It is further settled that if one member separates there is no presumption either that all have separated or that the others have remained joint. This must be proved like any other fact: vide 58 I. A. 220[63] at p. 226. See also Mulla's Hindu Law, paragraph 328 (3). Property may be coparcenary with regard to some members but the other members of the family may have no interest in it : vide Trevelyan's Hindu Law, 3rd edition, pages 267 and 268 and A. I. R. 1938 Nag. 7[67] at p. 11.

[169] Further, even if we were to hold that Narendra Bahadur Singh remained joint with his brothers, there would still arise the question whether he had excluded them and their descendants from the joint family property. Mr. Wasim contended that it was not a question of exclusion to which Art. 127 of Sch. I, Limitation Act, might apply but of adverse possession under Art. 144. His argument was that Art. 127 only applies when the family is joint at the date of the suit. In the present case we are considering the state of affairs as it existed in the lifetime of Narendra Bahadur Singh and it is only if it is found that the family was then joint that the question of exclusion becomes material. It is thus a case of exclusion and not of adverse possession. Moreover, at no stage of the case, was adverse possession pleaded. Defendant 1's counsel clearly stated, at the time of the framing of issues : "Jai Narain and his sons, the present plaintiffs have been excluded because, for more than 12 years, Jai Narain was not given profits or otherwise treated as a member of a joint family by Narendra Bahadur Singh." Defendant 2 took the same plea though in different words. A new plea of adverse possession cannot be allowed to be raised in appeal.

[170] As to what amounts to exclusion has been laid down in a large number of decisions which are not all consistent. The law is summarised by Rustomji in his Commentary on the "Law of Limitation", 5th edition, vol. II at pp. 1104 and 1105. It is not necessary to set it out in detail, nor it is necessary for us to go into all the cases cited by the parties. At this stage we would only say that the question as to what amounts to exclusion depends upon the facts of each particular case but that an intention to exclude is essential : vide 56 I. A. 316.[68]

[171] We will first consider the position with regard to the movable property. There is no evidence as to whether this is ancestral or was acquired by Narendra Bahadur Singh. In the case of an ordinary Hindu family possessed of joint property it would be presumed that the acquisitions would also be joint property, but in the present case Narendra Bahadur Singh derived a very large income from his exclusive property and only a small income from his non-taluqdari property— the only property which might be said to be joint family property. It cannot be presumed that the movable property was acquired from one source or the other or that it was ancestral and not self-acquired : see 12 I. A. 112[69] at pp. 114, 115. Further the nature of most of the property indicates that it was the personal property of Narendra Bahadur Singh alone. List E consists of jewellery and articles of gold and silver and in list J are entered such articles of display as are usually found in the bands of owners of large estates. List F consists of articles of apparel and bedding (mostly described as new) and similar other articles and list H consists of utensils. These are not such articles as could date back to before 1892. All the articles in these lists will, therefore, in any case, go to the widow. List G consists of papers and documents and list I of houses : these will go with the villages to which they relate or in which they are situated.

[172] As to the immovable property, the first thing to notice is that the parties agree that the whole of it has come down from the time of Madho Prasad Singh and that Gopal Saran Singh and his descendants whose names will be found in the pedigree have been excluded from all share in it, although it is in evidence that some of them at least live in the family house at Haswar and receive occasional assistance out of the income of the property. Further there is no allegation that this branch of the family is joint with the branch fo Har Dutt Singh. It is also to be remembered that Ex. A 8 does not operate as a will with regard to this property.

[173] Next it is agreed that the income of the non-taluqdari property is not kept separate from the income of the Taluqdari property; that all of the properties are under one management and control : and that one set of accounts has been kept for the whole income and expenditure without any distinction. Indeed none of the parties have made any differentiation between the two classes of properties at any stage of the case : no evidence has been led which might have a bearing on the taluqdari as distinct from the non-taluqdari property and even in the arguments before us, no distinction was drawn between the two kinds of property. It seems to have been assumed by all the parties that if the taluqdari properties were joint the non-taluqdari were also joint and that if Narendra Bahadur was owner of the taluqdari properties he was also exclusive owner of the remaining properties.

[174] It is also agreed that since the death of Har Dutt Singh, Jai Narain Singh and his sons were in possession of two villages and similarly Inder Bikram Singh and his sons were in possession of two villages for their maintenance. The four villages are admittedly part of the taluqdari estate. Out of the savings of the income of these villages the two younger brothers built up a banking business which carried on the work of lending money on a fairly large scale. Money was lent by it to Narendra Bahadur Singh at high rates of interest and it is not disputed that Narendra Bahadur Singh had no interest in this business which was the exclusive property of the two younger brothers and their sons.

[175] It is clear that on the death of Madho Prasad Singh, Har Dutt Singh alone entered into possession of all the property, Taluqdari and non-Taluqdari, left by his father. This is inconclusive, because Gopal Saran Singh and Suraj Bali Singh were, at this time both minors but it is agreed that Suraj Bali Singh died issueless at a young age and Gopal Saran Singh and his descendants were excluded. Further it is important to note that Har Dutt Singh was considered by all, the authorities as well as members of the family to be the sole owner vide Exs. A-126/D. W. 3 (Sanad granted to Har Dutt Singh), A-17, A-18 and A-106 (lists of taluqdars in which Har Dutt Singh's name is entered), A-108, in which Gopal Saram Singh refers to him as Taluqdar and admits his ownership while calling himself the brother of the Taluqdar: more over Har Dutt Singh always dealt with all the property as his own exclusive property : vide Exs. A-66, A-63 and A-20. All the documents which we have mentioned refer to the status of Har Dutt Singh as Taluqdar and his property as Taluqdari but as we have already noted no one at any time drew any distinction between the Taluqdari and other properties.

[176] Thereafter Narendra Bahadur Singh was treated in the same way and he continued to be in charge of all the properties. Even in the plaint of this suit he was referred to as the last person in possession of all the properties in schedule (B) in which schedule the non-taluqdari properties are also mentioned and the basis of the claim is succession to Narendra Bahadur Singh. Further the conduct of Jai Narain Singh and all the other members of the family shows that they considered to him to be separate from themselves. Plaintiff 1, as P. W. 4 admits that the mess of Inder Bikram Singh and Jai Narain Singh so long as both of them were alive was joint but that of Narendra Bahadur was separate the latter deriving his grain from the estate sir and the other two from their own sir and from the profits of their banking business in which was also included the income of the four guzara villages. Separation in mess is by itself of not much value but the importance of it in the present case lies in the fact that the two younger brothers and their children continued joint in mess and it was only the eldest brother, who according to plaintiffs' case, held the joint family property that was separate. In EX. A-38, a statement made by him in 1930 in a criminal case instituted by his nephew (cousin) Girdhariji against Jitendra Mohan Singh, defendant 1, Babu Jai Narain Singh stated that he had no hand in the management of the Haswar estate except the four villages which had been granted to him and his brother for guzara. He considered that Narendra Bahadur Singh was the owner and he did even know who would succeed him. Again, while giving evidence, in a case between Babu Narendra Bahadur Singh and the Oudh Commercial Bank, he clearly stated on 26th November 1932: "I am separate in business from the objector" (Babu Narendra Bahadur Singh) vide EX. A-90.

[177] In 1934 very shortly before the death of Babu Narendra Bahadur Singh, Jitendra Mohan Singh and his brothers and son instituted a suit against Jai Narain Singh the present plaintiffs and their sons for partition. The documents relating to this suit indicate that all the members of the family considered themselves to be separate from Narendra Bahadur Singh. Exhibit A-42 is the plaint. Paragraphs 1 and 2 show that it was claimed that the parties were members of a joint Hindu family owning the property in suit with which Narendra Bahadur Singh, who was the Taluqdar, had nothing to do. Exhibit A-89, the written statement filed on behalf, among others, of the present plaintiffs, is very significant. The allegations about Babu Narendra Bahadur Singh and the joint family given in paragraphs 1 and 2 were admitted and it was pleaded that after the grant of the guzara villages "the estate ceased to meet their domestic expenses and Babu Inder Bikram Singh and defendant 1 used to maintain themselves and the members of their family from the income of the said villages" (paragraph 14). It was also said that the entire property of the family had not been included in the suit and so the suit was liable to be dismissed (paragraph 28). This was explained as meaning twenty head of bullocks and household articles but no mention of any villages is made (see EX. A-159). It was further stated that some houses (in which the parties resided) belonged to Narendra Bahadur Singh and were not liable to partition (paragraph 33). In the course of proceedings of 23rd May 1935 (EX. A-159) Jitendra Mohan Singh's counsel stated that the sons of Har Dutt Singh acquired an interest in the non-taluqdari property by birth and on Har Dutt Singh's death the sons separated, Inder Bikram Singh and Jai Narain Singh getting the non-taluqdari property jointly and Narendra Bahadur Singh the Taluqa. He further specifically stated that Narendra Bahadur Singh "ceased to remain a member of the joint family on his father's death." The advocate for plaintiffs and their father on the other hand, stated that Har Dutt Singh did not possess any non-Taluqdari property. He further stated "Inder Bikram Singh and defendant 1" (Jai Narain) were members of a joint Hindu family but I cannot say who (what)others were members of the family joint with them."

[178] The documents to which we have just referred clearly indicate the conduct of the members of the family, the persons who would be in the best position to know the status of the family, and they show that Narendra Bahadur Singh was not considered in 1934 as forming a member of the joint family. This becomes all the more significant when we find that, though he was himself no party to the ligitation, Narendra Bahadur was assisting Jai Narain Singh and was defending the case for him—vide P. W. 4 Parbhu Narain Singh. Further P. W. 4, Parbhu Narain Singh plaintiff 1 tells us that, shortly before his death Babu Narendra Bahadur Singh intended to execute a will, had had a draft prepared and had called the Commissioner of Lucknow to attest it. All this was done with the knowledge of Jai Narain Singh and the witness without protest. This is certainly not consistent with Narendra Bahadur's position as head of a joint Hindu family. We consider that the only inference which can be drawn from all this evidence is that Narendra Babadur Singh had separated from his brothers shortly after the death of his father having allotted to them two villages each for their support, while the other two brothers and their families remained joint till 1934 —when they also effected a partition by means of a suit. Thus there was no joint family in existence when Narendra Bahadur Singh died.

[179] In this view of the matter the question of exclusion does not really arise but on this point also we must hold, on the evidence that there has in fact been an exclusion. It is no doubt true that Narendra Bahadur Singh very often made presents to the various members of the family with whom he was on the most affectionate terms: vide EXS. 104, 106, 126, 127, 129, 115, 116, 117 and 120. He also paid for the education of the boys and girls (though it is not proved that he paid for them all) and contributed towards the expenses of the marriages of the daughters: vide EXS. 161/P. W. 1 to 170 and 187 to 202, as well as the report of the commissioners appointed to examine the accounts. It is, however, equally true that all the domestic expenses, as well as the expenses of the sons' marriages and a part of the expenses of the daughters' marriages were borne by Inder Bikram Singh and Jai Narain Singh out of the income of their guzara villages and their business: vide EXS. B-31 to B-44, the reports of the commissioners and Ex. A-37 and A-38. The question that arises is whether in this state of affairs it can be said that the brothers were excluded from the joint family property.

[180] Mr. Wasim relied on 2 A. L. J. 225[70] and 18 Cal. 341[71] for the proposition that payments made out of the income of the property in the possession of a member of a joint family does not create any rights in the persons to whom they are made since they are "payments made gratuitously and out of his mere bounty" and "it would not be reasonable or conducive to the peace and welfare of the families to construe acts done out of kindness and affection to the disadvantage of the doer of them." Those cases have, however, no application. In the first case the property was found to be the separate property of the person in possession and in these circumstances payments made by him to other members of the joint family were held not to constitute it a joint family property. In the second case one of the two brothers was deaf and dumb from birth and as such excluded from inheritance under the Hindu law. His elder brother nevertheless treated him as a co-owner with himself for a long time. It was held that this did not create any title in the younger brother since none existed in law. In the present case the property would but for exclusion be the joint family property of all the parties.

[181] The cases cited by the appellants' learned advocate are equally inapplicable to the facts of the present case because in those cases the sole property in the possession of the person who was said to have excluded others was property which was joint family property and the excluded member was in possession of a part of it. In the present case it is admitted that the guzara villages are a part of the Taluqdari estate they are not, therefore, any part of the joint estate and yet they and the business built out of their income were the principal means of livelihood for the younger brothers and their families. Possession of them by the younger brothers is, therefore, not possession of any part of the joint family property. Further even the payments that were made by Narendra Bahadur Singh were made out of income by far the larger portion of which was derived from his sole exclusive property. It was, therefore, not payment made in recognition of any subsisting right but "gratuitously and out of his mere bounty" and it was accepted as such: vide Exs. A-37 and A-38.

[182] We will now refer to two cases upon which the appellant's learned advocate laid special emphasis. In 24 I. A. 118[72] by argeement between two members of the family, brought about by a misapprehension that the estate was impartible, one of them obtained possession of the principal estate and the other obtained twovillages in lieu of maintenance. Their Lordships held: "There has been no denial of the title of Janardana and his family or exclusion of them from the estate. On the contrary the possession has been under and in accordance with the agreement of 1871, by which a provision was made for the junior branch." Their Lordships so held because: (a) the mistaken impression was that the estate was a joint Hindu family impartible estate, i. e., that the position that all the members of the family continued to have title to it was accepted by the agreement; (b) the allotment of the two villages as guzara was in recognition of the right of the younger branch in the estate; (c) the villages of which possession was given to the younger branch were villages belonging to the joint family estate and consequently possession over them was possession over a part of the family estate. In the present case the allotment of the Guzara villages was not based on recognition of the title of the joint family in the estate: it was based on recognition of the rights of Narendra Bahadur Singh to the whole estate and Guzara was accepted merely as an act of favour on his part. Secondly the Guzara villages are not part of the property which might be joint family property, i. e. the non Taluqdari property and consequently possession over them was not possession over a part of the joint family property.

[183] In 53 I. A. 220[73] also it was considered that the property was an impartible estate and the younger brothers were in receipt of considerable sums as cash maintenance and were in possession of lands forming part of the estate in lieu of the same. Their Lordships approved of the judgment of the Subordinate Judge who followed the decision in 24 I. A. 118.[72] This case is also distinguishable from the present case on the same grounds as 24 I. A. 118.[72]

[184] The respondent on the other hand relied upon the case in 12 I. A. 112.[69] This case is very closely analogous to the present case. It also related to the property in the possession of one cousin as taluqdar which included, it was alleged, some non-taluqdari joint Hindu family property and the question was of exclusion from the latter. Their Lordships say:

"It has indeed been contended that there was some joint possession on behalf of the plaintiff, on the grounds, first, that he lived in the family house though not in the same apartments with his cousin; secondly that he obtained an allowance of some Rs. 90/- either per mensem or per annum,—it does not clearly appear which. The first of these grounds does not appear to their Lordships to establish joint possession; the second goes some way to negative it."

The last words which we have underlined (here italicised) are significant and they indicate that the receipt of maintenance as such by a cadet of a taluqdar's family is acceptance of the fact that he has no interest in the estate itself and amounts to his exclusion from the estate by the grant of the maintenance. This case fully supports the argument of the respondent on the question of exclusion.

[185] We are conscious of the fact that in 53 I. A. 220[73] the Subordinate Judge, whose judgment their Lordships quote, relied upon this case and said:

"The last mentioned case in 12 I. A. 112[69] makes it clear that even where the person actually holding the property of a joint family believes that it is impartible property, and another member of the family sharing that belief accepts maintenance it does not amount to the exclusion of the latter and upholds the authority of the Privy Council in 20 Mad. 256[72]"

(which is the same as 24 I. A. 118.[72]) It seems to us that the judgment of their Lordships in 12 I.A. 112[69] is wholly incapable of the interpretation placed upon it by the Subordinate Judge. We have already quoted the relevant passage of their Lordships' judgment and that makes it clear that their Lordships held the reverse of what the Subordinate Judge thought they had held. The facts of that case were, however, not analogous to the facts in 53 I. A. 220[73] to which 24 I. A. 118[72], was fully applicable. Since the respondent in 53 I. A. 220[73] and the later case, 24 I. A. 118[72] fully supported the conclusion at which the Subordinate Judge had arrived, it is probable that 12 I. A. 112[69] was not placed before their Lordships. In the present case the position is different. 24 I. A. 118[72] is not analogous while 12 I. A. 112[69] is and we must follow the latter decision.

[186] A consideration of the evidence on this part of the case leads us to the conclusion that Narendra Bahadur Singh was not joint in estate with Jai Narain Singh and his descendants and the descendants of Inder Bikram Singh at the time of his death and that he had, in any case, excluded them from possession of the ancestral property.

[187] The learned advocate for respondent 2 urged that over and above the property which the learned Additional Civil Judge has held to be non-taluqdari he ought to have held other properties also to be, in any event, non-taluqdari. He first of all contends that the properties known as the "Manjhas" are non-taluqdari. The "Manjhas" are those portions of village which have been added to the lands of the village by the process of alluvion. They are an integral part of the villages to which they had been added and partake of the same nature. The decision of the Additional Civil Judge on this point is thus quite correct.

[188] The next set of villages about which there is controversy are Eqbalpur, Udharanpur, Baraipur, Seraiya and Hiraiya. The learned Additional Civil Judge has gone into the matter carefully and we have also considered the entries in the vernacular document on the record and we consider that all these villages are entered in Ex. A-2, the kabuliat of the second summary settlement, though there are some slight differences as to the spelling. These differences are immaterial and the identity of the villages is not in doubt.

There remains a group of 5 villages Gharwarpur, Lakhimpur, Lalmanpur, Lonedhee and Muzzaffarpur. These villages are not mentioned in Ex. A-2 and on a reference to the original list of which Ex. A-2 is a copy, the learned Additional Civil Judge found that the place where villages at Nos. 282 to 286 of the list occurred is so torn that it cannot be read. He has assumed that these villages were entered at the place because the list is arranged in alphabetical order and according to that arrangement villages beginning with the letters "gaf", "Lam" and "Meem" should occur at this place. In the absence of an entry in the list the fact that the villages were taluqdari was capable of proof by the production of other evidence, e.g., the Rubkar Akhir and the wajib-ul-arz :see 5 O. W. N. 299.[20] No other document relating to these villages, except a kabuliat executed by Har Dutt Singh on 28th June 1878, at the first regular settlement, Ex. A-19, has been produced. Exhibit A-19 does not establish the Taluqdari character of the property because the definition of estate read with S. 3 of Act I of 1869 only makes the property decreed at the regular settlement to a Taluqdar (and not to the heir or legatee of a Taluqdar) an "estate" subject to Act I of 1869. The learned Additional Civil Judge was not justified in drawing an inference when he had no material before him to justify that inference and the matter was capable of proof by the production of other documentary evidence. These villages must, therfore, be considered to be non-taluqdari property.

[189] As a result of our finding we hold that the property entered in list (A) of Schedule (B) attached to the plaint, apart from the villages which have been held by the Additional Civil Judge and by us not to be taluqdari, is governed by Act I of 1869 and defendant 1 is entitled to succeed to it under S. 22 of Act I of 1869. The plaintiffs have no claim to it and their suit must fail with regard to it. As to the non-taluqdari properties also the plaintiffs have no claim during the lifetime of the widow, defendant 2, and the appeal fails with regard to this also. We accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

Application No. 55 of 1943, Decided on 6-1-1948, from order of Dist. Judge, Gonda, D/- 30-11-1942.

(a) U. P. Agriculturists' Relief Act (27 [XXVII] of 1934), S. 12—Applicability—Mortgage by occupancy tenant is void — Mortgagor cannot claim redemption under S. 12—T. P. Act (1882), S. 6 (i).

Section 12 applies only to valid mortgages and not to mortgages which are void ab initio. An occupancy right is by its very nature not transferable and by reason of the provisions of S. 6 (i), T. K. P. Misra—for Applicants.

M. P. Srivastava—for Opposite Party.

Order.—On 20-7-1915 Mt. Prag Dei mortgaged 6. 13 acres of occupancy land situated in Pure Shankar, hamlet of Subhagpur district Gonda, to Govind Dat in lieu of a sum of Rs. 614. On the death of Mt. Prag Dei, there was some dispute as to succession to the property left by her but eventually Mt. Bachchi Dei her daughter obtained title to the mortgaged land and the responsibility to pay off the debt devolved upon her by virtue of a compromise Ex. 3 between her and another claimant. She accordingly made an application under S. 12, Agriculturists' Relief Act for redemption of the mortgage against the applicants who are the successors-in-interest of Govind Dat, the mortgagee. Various objections were taken to redemption being allowed but we are no longer concerned with most of them. Among the objections taken was the objection that there was no valid mortgage in existence and that consequently no application under S. 12 was maintainable. It was also pleaded that at any rate the U. P. Debt Redemption Act did not apply because the liability for the payment of the debt had been transferred to the applicant by a contract and therefore there was no loan within the meaning of the definition given in S. 2 clause (10) of that Act in existence. The trial Court held that in spite of the fact that the holding was an occupancy tenancy an application for redemption under S. 12, Agriculturists' Relief Act was maintainable and it also held that the applicant was not a transferee of the liability for the repayment of the debt and that consequently the provisions of the Debt Redemption Act were also applicable. On an account being taken in accordance with the provisions of the Debt Redemption Act it was found that the sum of Rs. 50-4-9 only was due from the applicant to the opposite parties towards the mortgage. Consequently the trial Court passed a decree for redemption on payment of this sum. The opposite parties went up in appeal and the District Judge of Gonda upheld the decision of the trial Court on both the above mentioned points. He accordingly dismissed the appeal. The opposite parties have now come up in revision to this Court.

[2] Mr. Misra the learned counsel for the applicants in this Court, has contended that there being no valid mortgage in existence, the Courts have no jurisdiction to proceed under S. 12, Agriculturists' Relief Act. In 1940 O. W. N. 352[1] it has been laid down by a Bench of this Court that S. 12, Agriculturists' Relief Act applies only to valid mortgages and not to mortgages which are void 'ab initio'; it was consequently held in that case that a statutory tenant who has mortgaged his holding cannot avail himself of the provisions of S. 12, Agriculturists' Relief Act. There was also a decision of the Allahabad High Court reported in 1943 R. D. 565[2] in which a Single Judge of that Court took the same view. In that case the question of an occupancy tenancy was involved. Subsequently however the Allahabad High Court has taken a different view and it has been laid down by a Full Bench of that Court in A. I. R. 1944 ALL. 25[3] that it is open to a tenant of an occupancy holding which has been mortgaged with possession to apply under S. 12, Agriculturists' Relief Act for redemption. This decision was followed by a learned Single Judge of the same Court in 1945 R. D. 280.[4]

[3] In the first of these decisions the view of this Court in 1940 O. W. N. 352[1] was considered but it was pointed out that in the matter of the rights of the mortgagees of tenancy holding there has been difference of opinion between the views of the Allahabad High Court and of this Court.

The learned Judges preferred to follow the view which was consistent with the previous decisions of their own Court. It is significant, however, that they stated in so many words that they were applying S. 12 to transactions "which are not strictly legal mortgages but which are analogous to mortgages and in substance partake of their nature."

[4] In the second case also the learned Judge held that there was no legal mortgage in existence but he considered that by reason of principle of equity in accordance with which the Court refused to assist a mortgagor of occupancy land in getting possession of the land unless he made restitution the case was

"to all intents and purposes of the same effect as a suit for redemption and for this reason such a mortgagor might be allowed to invoke the provisions of S. 12, Agriculturists' Relief Act."

The learned Judge clearly indicates that he was proceeding on the principle of equity in coming to this decision.

[5] The view in both these cases is directly opposed to the view prevalent in Avadh and with all respect to the learned Judges who decided those cases it is not possible to hold that a statute conferring jurisdiction, if particular conditions are satisfied, would be taken to confer jurisdiction also in cases which do not fall within the ambit of the conditions laid down (but?) merely within the basis of an analogy. Further there would be no question of equity not being done if a properly constituted suit for possession is brought by the tenant. When that is done it will be open to the Court before which the matter came up to protect rights of mortgagor and the mortgagee both. This would be a ground for extending the jurisdiction of a Court beyond that which is specifically conferred upon it by the statute.

[6] These two cases came up before me for consideration in 1947 O.W.N. 362.[5] In that case also I preferred to follow the view of this Court in 1940 O. W. N. 352.[1] The learned advocate for the opposite party has not brought to my notice anything which might induce me to alter the opinion which I then took.

[7] The learned advocate for the opposite-party contended that in the present case, although his client's predecessors possessed an occupancy right there is nothing to indicate that that right was not transferable. The term occupancy right is well understood in Avadh as indicating a heritable but not transferable right. It is not confined to the cases referred to in Ss. 5 and 7A, Oudh Rent Act, and may be created by grant by the landlord (vide S. 6, Oudh Rent Act) or by means of a decree. If the decree or the grant confers a heritable and transferable right, it has always been held by the Courts in Avadh that under-proprietary rights are conferred and there is no question of the right being an occupancy right in such a case. It is only if the grant is of a heritable but non-transferable right that it comes within the meaning of occupancy right. Thus by its very nature an occupancy right is not transferable and by reason of the provisions of S. 6 (i), T. P. Act, interest of an occupancy tenant cannot be assigned. Thus a mortgage by an occupancy tenant is void in law and cannot have effect.

[8] In the present case, therefore, the mortgage of which redemption was sought has in law no existence and, therefore, there can be no application under S. 12, Agriculturists' Relief Act, for its redemption.

[9] The first contention of the learned counsel for the applicants must, therefore, prevail and in this view it is not necessary to consider any further objection that he has taken. The result is that this application is allowed and the application of Mt. Bachchi Dei under S. 12, Agriculturists' Relief Act, will stand dismissed. The applicants will get their costs throughout.

Second Civil Appeal No. 267 of 1943, Decided on 20-2-1948, against order of District Judge, Hardoi, D/- 2-4-1943.

U. P. Temporary Postponement of Execution of Decrees Act (10 [X] of 1937), S. 5—Scope—Limitation cannot be saved for taking proceedings for final decree in mortgage suit under O. 34, R. 5, Civil P. C.

Section 5 leaves suits which had already been instituted untouched and such suits are allowed to proceed in the ordinary way. The proceedings for final decree in a mortage suit are clearly proceedings in a suit. They neither mark its commencement nor do they constitute proceedings in execution of a mortage decree. They cannot, therefore, be given the benefit of S. 5, so as to save limitation under Art. 181, Limitation Act for applying for making the preliminary mortgage decree, absolute under R. 5 of O. 34, Civil P. C., by exclusion of time during which the Act remained in force: 31 A. I. R. 1944 Oudh 102 ; 31 A. I. R. 1944 Oudh 298 and 31 A.I.R. 1944 All. 59, Rel. on. [Para 3]

H. Hussain—for Respondent 1.

Judgment.—This second appeal is directed against the appellate order of the learned District Judge, Hardoi, reversing the decision of the learned Additional Civil Judge and granting to respondent 1, Lachhman Prasad, a final decree for sale on the foot of a mortgage dated 4-12-1923.

[2] Lachhman Prasad obtained his preliminary decree under O. 34, R. 4, Civil P. C., on 2-6-1936. He did not apply for the making of a decree absolute till 12-11-1942. The application was obviously beyond the period of limitation prescribed by Art. 181, Limitation Act, and the applicant in order to save limitation invoked the aid of S. 5, Temporary Postponement of Execution of Decrees Act (10 [X] of 1937). The section provides that in computing the period of limitation prescribed by the Limitation Act, 1908, or any other law for the time being in force, for "the institution of a suit in a Civil Court against an agriculturist for money or for foreclosure or sale in enforcement of a mortgage" the period during which the Act remains in force shall be excluded. It also grants a similar exclusion of time for proceedings in execution of decrees passed in such suits. The trial Court was of opinion that the aforesaid section did not relate to the presentation of an application for a final decree. The learned District Judge on the other hand considered that the application amounted in effect to the commencement of a suit, because the proceeding initiated by it culminate in a decree which finally adjudicated upon the rights of the parties.

[3] A perusal of the preamble of the Act will show that it was brought on the statute book, because it was considered expedient to provide for temporary postponement of execution of certain decrees passed against agriculturists pending further legislation for granting them relief from indebtedness. The provisions of S. 5 so far as they relate to the exclusion of time for institution of a suit were apparently intended to encourage creditors to desist from filing suits, the fruits of which they could not be permitted to reap till after the enactment of the projected legislation. It would seem obvious that the legislature desired to relieve for the time being the agriculturist debtors from being harassed by their creditors in two ways : (1) by prohibiting execution of decrees based on secured or unsecured loans and (2) by discouraging fresh suits. The suits which had already been instituted were left untouched, and such suits were allowed to proceed in the ordinary way. The proceedings for final decree in a mortgage suit are clearly proceedings in a suit. They neither mark its commencement nor do they constitute proceedings in execution of a mortgage decree. They cannot, therefore, be given the benefit of S. 5. The decision in A. I. R. 1944 Avadh 102,[1] 20 Luck. 271[2] and A. I. R. 1944 ALL. 59[3] would seem to support this view. We are clear therefore, that Lachhman Prasad's application for the preparation of a final decree for sale was beyond time. The learned Additional Civil Judge was justified in rejecting the application as time barred. We allow the appeal, set aside the appellate decision of the learned District Judge and restore that of the Court of first instance. In the circumstances of the case the parties shall bear their own costs of this Court and of the Courts below.

Second Civil Appeal No. 37 of 1943, Decided on 26-2-1948, against order of Civil Judge, Gonda, D/- 21-10-1942.

(a) Limitation Act (1908), Art. 44 — Suit must be brought within three years of attaining majority.

Suit for possession of a house belonging to the plaintiff and sold by his guardian, who was not a certificated guardian, during the plaintiff's minority, if governed by Art. 44, must be brought within three years of the minor's attaining majority : 26 A. I. R. 1939 Oudh 122, Ref. [Para 4]

Annotation : ('42-Com.) Lim. Act, Art. 44, N. 2.

(b) Limitation Act (1908), Art. 144 — Time runs from date when possession of holder becomes adverse — Possession can be adverse to minor.

Where Art. 144 applies, limitation would commence from the date that the possession of the holder became adverse. A person holding under an invalid transfer holds adversely to the real owner from the date of his possession. The fact that real owner was a minor when the possession was taken makes no difference : 6 A.I.R. 1919 P. C. 44, Rel. on ; 15 A. I. R. 1928 Oudh. 481, Ref. [Para 5]

(c) Limitation Act (1908), Art. 142—Applicability.

(d) Limitation Act (1908), S. 8 — Limitation running from cessation of disability — Extension does not go beyond three years after cessation of disability — Original period expiring more than three years after cessation — There is no question of extension — Period is not curtailed — Limitation Act (1908), S. 6.

Section 6 gives an extension of time to persons suffering from a disability including minority and in their case limitation begins to run from the date on which disability ceases. But by virtue of S. 8, this extension is not to be for more than three years after the cessation of the disability. If on the other hand, the original period prescribed by Sch. 1 expires more than 3 years after the termination of the disability, then, upto the date on which the limitation prescribed by that schedule expires, there is no question of any extension of time and S. 8 will not operate to curtail the period of limitation : 24 A. H. D. Srivastava — for Appellant.
S. N. Srivastava — for Respondent.

Judgment. — The appellant was born on 12-7-1913. On 28-1-1924 when the appellant was only about 11 years old his sister's husband, Jagrup Lal purporting to act as his guardian sold a house belonging to him to Ram Samujh, father of the respondent, for a sum of Rs. 24. The vendee entered into possession and after him his son, the respondent, obtained possession. The appellant attained majority on 12-7-1931 and on 15-12-1941 he instituted the suit out of which this appeal arises for possession of the house and for Rs. 10 as mesne profits in the Court of the Munsif, Gonda.

[2] The defendant raised various defences one of which was that the suit was barred by time. The learned Munsif rejected all the defences including that of limitation and decreed the suit, On appeal the learned Civil Judge of Gonda upheld the plea of limitation reversed the decree of the Munsif and dismissed the suit. The plaintiff has now come up in second appeal and the sole point for consideration is one of limitation.

[3] The suit was framed as a suit for possession after dispossession and consequently Art. 142, Limitation Act, would apply to it. In arguments both before the learned Civil Judge and in this Court it was however contended that Art. 144 applied. On the other hand the respondent contended both in this Court as well as in the Court below, that Art. 44 applied. It is immaterial which article applies because in any case the suit is barred by time.

[4] If Art. 44 applies—for which there is some authority even though it was not a certificated guardian who made the transfer—vide (1939 O. W. N. 241[1]) the suit was barred as not having been instituted within three years of the minor's attaining majority.

[5] If Art. 142 applies limitation would ordinarily commence from the date of dispossession, i. e., from 28-1-1924 and if Art. 144 applies limitation would commence from the date that the possession of the holder became adverse. This would also be 28-1-1924 because it is well settled that a person holding under an invalid transfer holds adversely to the real owner (vide 46 I. A. 285[2] at p. 290). In the present case the defendant's father entered into possession as full proprietor in denial of the appellant's rights over the property or rather on an assertion that those rights had ceased. His possession was, therefore, adverse from its commencement. There is no authority for the contention that there there can be no adverse possession against a minor. Indeed in A. I. R. 1928 Oudh 481[3] the contrary has been laid down. Consequently limitation would in ordinary circumstances run from the date of that possession.

[6] Section 6, Limitation Act, however, gives an extension of time to persons suffering from a disability including minority and in their case limitation begins to run from the date on which disability ceases. Thus in the case before me, limitation began to run not on 28-1-1924 but on 12-7-1931, and the period would be extended up to 12-7-1943. This is what the trial Court held in coming to the conclusion that the suit was instituted within time but, in doing so, it failed to consider the effect of S. 8, Limitation Act. That section is quite clearly worded and its language is not at all ambiguous. It provides that, in those cases in which the application of S. 6 of the Act results in an extension of the period prescribed by Sch. I, that extension is not to be for more than three years after the cessation of the disability. If, on the other hand, the original period prescribed by Sch. I, expires more than 3 years after the termination of the disability, then, upto the date on which the limitation prescribed by that schedule expires, there is no question of any extension of time and S. 8, will not operate to curtail the period of limitation. This is made quite clear in Illus. (c) to S. 8.

[7] In the present case, the limitation prescribed by Sch. I, would expire on 28-1-1936, i. e., more than 3 years after the termination of the disability. This cannot be curtailed by the application of S. 8. On the other hand by applying S. 6, limitation would expire on 12-7-1943, which would have the effect of extending it for more than 3 years after the cessation of disability, and this cannot be allowed, in view of the provisions of S. 8, to happen. Thus limitation expired on 28-1-1936, and the present suit was commenced beyond time.

[8] The learned advocate for the appellant relied upon 1937 O. W. N. 1012[4] but from the facts given in the report it cannot be ascertained whether S. 8, Limitation Act, could have any application to it. It is certainly not mentioned in the judgment which would lead to the conclusion that it was not relevant and the effect of its provisions on the case did not fall to be considered. This authority, therefore, can be of no assistance to the plaintiff. The decision of the learned Civil Judge is, therefore, correct and must be maintained. The appeal thus fails and is dismissed with costs.

DAVIS C. J. AND THADANI J.

Jiandalshah Dostalishah — Applicant v. Emperor.

Criminal Revn. Appln. No. 287 of 1946, Decided on 12-12-1946.

(a) Sind Frontier Regulation (3 [III] of 1892), S. 17 —Decree or sentence under Regulation—No appeal but revision only lies to Commissioner of Sind—Judicial Commissioner's Court has no power to revise or review it.

Under S. 17 of the Regulation no appeal lies from a decree or sentence passed under the Regulation, but there is a revising power vested in the Commissioner of Sind. The Judicial Commissioner's Court has no power of revision or review against it: 7 A. I. R 1920 Sind 51, Foll. [Para 2]

(b) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 491—Magistrate purporting to act under Regulation III of 1892 issuing notice under S. 20 (1) against a person and detaining him in custody pending inquiry—Detention is illegal as unauthorised by the Regulation—Person can be set at liberty.

A Magistrate purporting to act under the Sind Frontier Regulation, 1892, issued against a person a notice under S. 20 of the Regulation and pending the inquiry detained him in custody. The person applied to the Judicial Commissioner's Court under S. 491, Criminal P. C.

Held, that there was no definite exclusion of S. 491 in the Regulation but even if there was, once the Court was satisfied that the detention was outside the provisions of the Regulation, the power of interference under that section was available ; [Para 7]

Further that, in view of the provisions of the Regulation the Magistrate had no power to detain the applicant in custody at that stage and the detention being illegal the applicant was entitled to be set at liberty, though, under the circumstances of the case, with sureties: 31 A. I. R. 1944 F. C. 86, Ref. [Para 7]

A. K. Brohi—for Applicant.

Fatehchand Issudamal, Advocate General—for the Crown.

Davis C. J.—This is an application under S. 491, Criminal P. C., or in the alternative under ss. 435 and 439, Criminal P. C., read with S. 17, Sind Courts Act, in which it is prayed that we order the release from unlawful custody of one Jiandalshah, son of Dostalishah, a zamindar of Arazi, taluka Sehwan, on the ground that the District Magistrate has, purporting to act under Regulation III of 1892 (a regulation to amend the law for the suppression of crime on the Sind Frontier) acted entirely outside the scope of the Act, in that he exercised a power of detention which could only be properly exercised under the provisions of S. 117, Criminal P. C., read with the Sind Frontier Regulation. But under S. 22 (3) of that very Regulation, it is clearly laid down that S. 117, Criminal P. C., does not apply.

[2] We will make it clear at once that we do not consider this Court has any power of revision or review ; for we agree with the view in judgment in 13 S. L. R. 215,[1] in which it was pointed out by a Division Bench of the Sind Judicial Commissioner's Court that under S. 17 of the Regulation no appeal shall lie from a decree or sentence passed under the Regulation; but that there is a revising power vested in the Commissioner of Sind in the matter of sentence and decrees How this word 'sentence' is used in this context and how it should be interpreted is not now necessary to decide. In the case before the learned Judicial Commissioners the order was one of committing persons to rigorous imprisonment for failure to give security; but the learned Judicial Commissioners did not consider it necessary to decide whether such an order was a sentence within the meaning of S. 17 of the Regulation; for, if it was not, then no power of revision vested with the Commissioner in Sind, even less so with the Court; but if such an order be deemed a sentence then it was for the Commissioner in Sind and not for this Court to exercise a revising power. But the question of the exercise of powers under S. 491, Criminal P. C, appears to us to proceed on different principles from that of the exercise of an appellate or revising power under the Code of Criminal Procedure, because if we interfere under S. 491, Criminal P. C., it is not because of something done under the Regulation but because of something done entirely outside the scope of the Regulation and only when it is plain that what is done amounts to a detention in custody; for, while the provisions of S. 491, Criminal P. C., are wide, in that it entitles the High Court under certain circumstances to give relief to any person within the limits of its appellate jurisdiction—and a person in Dadu District is undoubtedly within the limits of our appellate Court jurisdiction—it is clear that what the section relates to is unlawful detention. Clause (b) of S. 491, for instance, relates to a person illegally or improperly detained in public or private custody and it is only from this aspect of unlawful detention that we are considering this case at all.

[3] In 13 S. L. R. 215[1] the learned Judicial Commissioners referred to another case, 7 S. L. R. 194,[2] in which the Judicial Commissioner's Court did interfere with an order purported to have been made under the provisions of the Regulation of 1892, for it was plain that the order was not made within the scope of the Regulation at all; it fell under S. 514, Criminal P C.

[4] Now, it would appear that in this case the applicant was arrested on the orders of the District Magistrate. The order which bears date 15-11-1946, reads as follow:

"Whereas it has been made to appear to me that you Jiandal Shah s/o Dost Ali Shah of Arazi taluka Sehwan are likely to commit murder or culpable homicide not amounting to murder:

"This is therefore to require you the said Jaindal Shah s/o Dost Ali Shah to appear before me on 22-11-1946 and to show cause why you should not be bound down to be of good behaviour for a period of 3 years with two sureties and P. R. for Rs. 5000 each."

Now, although no Regulation or section of the Regulation is mentioned, it is plain that this order was made within the terms of S. 20 of the Regulation of 1892 and there is no ground whatever for our interference in virtue of that order. Now S. 20 of the Regulation reads as follows:

"(a) when the District Magistrate or the Commissioner in Sindh is of opinion that it is necessary, for the purpose of preventing murder or culpable homicide not amounting to murder to require any person to execute a bond for good behaviour he may, on the conditions and in the circumstances mentioned in this section order such person to execute a bond, with or without sureties, for his good behaviour during such period, not exceeding three years, as the District Magistrate or the said Commissioner, as the case may be, may fix . . . ."

We are not concerned with the allegation that this order was made by the District Magistrate from ulterior motives or made under duress of those in authority above him to advance the prospects of a particular party at the Elections to the Provincial Legislature that were comparatively close at hand. But we think that in view of the allegations that have been made we should say that we consider the explanation that the learned District Magistrate has been good enough to give us appears to us a perfectly sincere explanation and a perfectly simple and truthful statement of the circumstances under which he acted and the applicant at least should feel satisfied that the fear that the Magistrate has taken action against him under the orders of his superiors for the purpose of advancing the prospects of a particular party at the polls, is unfounded. The learned District Magistrate might, however, wish to bear in mind the saying, which is so often applied to proceedings in Courts but which we think is capable of a wider application that not only should justice be done but that justice should seem to be done, so that there may not so readily be given to what is a mere coincidence a sinister interpretation. But while S. 20, Sind Frontier Regulation, gives power to a Magistrate to issue orders in its terms, it does not give power of detention; it gives power to a District Magistrate to make an order under sub-s. (1) on the ground set out in sub-s. (2), that is to say, on the recommendation of a Council of Elders, "or" after inquiry as hereinafter provided; and the 'inquiry hereinafter provided' is an inquiry under S 22 (1). Again, S 22 refers to an enquiry and not to the power of arrest and sub-s (3) of that very section excludes what is known as an emergency order under S 117, Criminal P. C., where before the inquiry proper is completed and a final order made, the accused person can, on failure to give security, be committed forthwith to custody. It is urged before us that it is in fact under the powers conferred by S. 117, Criminal P C., and excluded by sub s. (3) of S. 22 from the Sind Frontier Regulation that the learned District Magistrate has until now detained this Jiandalshah in unlawful custody.

[5] Now S. 27 of the Regulation incorporates in effect parts of Chap. 8, Criminal P C, and applies to cases of requiring or giving security under Ss. 20, 21 or 26 of the Regulation. Section 27 of the Regulation also says that Ss. 20 to 26 both inclusive shall be read with and construed as part of chap. 8, Criminal P. C. It is therefore to the Code of Criminal Procedure that we look for the powers of the District Magistrate to detain the applicant Jiandalshah in custody, pending the completion of the inquiry under S. 22 and it would appear that the learned District Magistrate has purported to exercise powers under S. 114, Criminal P. C Now S 114, Criminal P. C. authorises the Magistrate under certain circumstances to order the immediate arrest by the issue of a warrant of arrest of the person to whom the proviso in S. 114, Criminal P. C. applies. But it would appear to us that the power of arrest upon a warrant under S. 114, Criminal P. C. does not authorise detention if the person arrested can give sureties who are solvent, in terms of an order which the Magistrate should make, and we think that where, for instance, in S. 114, Criminal P. C. there is no such special provision, authorising detention as there is, for instance, in sub-section (4) of S. 107, Criminal P. C. it must be presumed that the ordinary law applicable in the matter of releasing arrested person upon the giving of solvent sureties, applies just as much to a person arrested under the provisions of S. 114, Criminal P. C. embodied by S. 27, Sind Frontier Regulation in that Regulation itself as to persons arrested under S. 114, Criminal P. C. in the ordinary way. And we have not been able to find any authority nor has the learned Advocate-General been able to find any authority, which authorises the detention of a person arrested under S. 114, Criminal P. C. except on his inability to give solvent sureties in the amounts ordered by the Magistrate, directing the arrest; and the learned Advocate-General accepts the view that it is not open in these circumstances for a Magistrate to require, for instance, that the sureties shall be zamindars paying so many hundreds or so many thousands of rupees assessment, or residing within a particular locality and having power to exercise control over the conduct of the accused person. Those considerations might apply to an order to give security when the inquiry is completed or to an enquiry under S. 117, Criminal P. C. They do not apply at a stage of the proceedings where the inquiry has not been completed and no order requiring security to be given has been passed and the inquiry is pending.

[6] The purpose of the arrest under S. 114, Criminal P. C. is to bring the accused person before the Court; the purpose of taking sureties is that he should appear before the Court and though in the Criminal Procedure Code, S. 117 gives power to pass what has been called an emergency order, whereby pending the completion of the inquiry an accused person can, on his failure to provide proper sureties, be committed to custody, that section is expressly excluded from the Regulation and it is to be inferred that the power conferred by that section is not exercisable under that Regulation.

[7] We think, therefore, that it must be said that the learned District Magistrate in detaining at this stage and in these circumstances the applicant, has acted entirely outside the scope of the Regulation. We have power under S. 491, Criminal Pro. Code to direct with or without conditions that this illegal detention of the applicant be brought to an end, and the case before us is far stronger than the case in 23 Pat. 678[3] a case before the Federal Court where S. 491 was excluded by the provisions of the Ordinance itself. There is in this Regulation no definite exclusion of S. 491, Criminal P. C., but even if there was, once we are satisfied that a detention was outside the provisions of the Act, our powers of interference under S. 491, Criminal Pro. Code, would be available and would in proper circumstances be used to bring an unlawful detention to an end. We do not think however that the applicant is entitled to be set at liberty without sureties, for we think that as the Magistrate was entitled when he was arrested to detain him in custody, if solvent sureties were not forthcoming, so we should direct his release only on condition that he provides solvent sureties for the purpose of his appearance before the District Magistrate in these proceedings which the District Magistrate, it appears to us, has lawfully instituted against him. We think we should ask from him two sureties of Rs. 5,000 each and a personal bond of Rs. 10,000. In the first order requiring sureties the District Magistrate has asked for two sureties of Rs. 5,000 each and a personal bond of a like amount. We would make it plain that the order we have passed is limited only to what we consider the unlawful detention of the applicant at this stage of the proceedings. It must not be taken to limit in any way the freedom of the District Magistrate to act under the Regulation in accordance with its provisions in the proceedings now pending before him. The solvency of the sureties must be left to the determination of the District Magistrate, and it will of course be open to the applicant to deposit the sum of Rs. 10,000 in his Court as if this bail was a matter under S. 496, Criminal P. C.

Order accordingly.

CONSTANTINE J.

Alcock, Ashdown & Co. Ltd. —Plaintiffs v. Municipal Corporation of Karachi — Defendants.

Civil Suit No. 374 of 1945, Decided on 15-4-1947.

(a) City of Karachi Municipal Act (17 [XVII] of 1933), Ss. 151, 155 and 230 (2)—Newly establishing factory — Permission for, under S. 151 — Specification of period — Annual recurring fee if leviable — Annual fee if valid as tax — Permission under S. 151 granted subject to conditions — Conditions if legal.

Newly establishing a factory is not a continuing process like carrying on a trade. In the case of newly establishing a factory the provision in S. 230 (2) that the permission shall specify the period for which it is granted merely connotes that the establishment must take place within the period specified by the permission: it does not mean that in addition to establishing a factory within the period specified by the original permission fresh retrospective permissions or extensions of the original permission are to be obtained so long as the factory continues to work. [Para 15]

Plaintiff applied to the Chief officer of the Municipal Corporation for a license to establish a workshop for ship-building, ship-repairs and general engineering, informing that the motive would be electricity and the total approximate horse- power would be 325. Thereafter the Standing Committee upon a note put up by the Chief Officer granted the permission applied for under S. 151 subject to the conditions that (1) the licensee (Plaintiff) shall conform to the terms and conditions of the license to be issued by the Chief Officer in this behalf; (2) that the Standing Committee reserve to themselves the right to revoke the permission at any time without assigning any reason therefor; and (3) that an annual fee of Rs. 100 shall be charged for motors or engines of over 50. horse-power employed by the plaintiff. No period was specified in the permission granted by the standing committee but it was assumed that by the mention of an annual fee it was implied that the period was to be from year to year. In a suit brought by the plaintiff against the Corporation for a declaration that the conditions were illegal and the levy of yearly fee was unwarranted:

Held (1) that the Standing Committee was not empowered to charge a recurring annual fee as newly establishing factory for which the permission or license was granted was not a continuous process like the carrying on of a trade or factory. Hence levying of the annual fee was inconsistent with the Act and therefore unwarranted: 32 A. I. R. 1945 Sind 116, Rel. on. [Para 15]

[2] That a municipality is not entitled to regard and use fees as a method of taxation. But even if the annual fee (which the Corporation was not empowered to charge) be regarded as a tax it was unwarranted by the Act: 14 A. I. R. 1927 Rang. 183, 15 A. I. R 1928 Mad. 847 and 21 A. I. R. 1934 All. 39, Ref. [Para 21]

[3] That the annual fee could not be regarded as instalments of a single fee as the annual fees recur indefinitely nor could it be leviable as a condition under S. 151 as the levying of a fee is governed by S. 230 and the conditions contemplated by S. 151 have nothing to do with the levying of a fee for permission under S. 151. [Para 16]

[4] That the license could not be regarded as having been issued under S. 155, for if the plaintiff's trade fell within S. 155 then the first condition was unnecessary; nor could the fees be said to have been fixed under S. 155 as separate fees under that section had been paid by the plaintiff. [Paras 17, 19]

[5] that (a) the first condition was inconsistent with the language of S. 151 since it is not for the Chief officer but for the Standing Committee to lay down terms and conditions; (b) that the second condition was unreasonable; and that (c) the third condition was illegal except in so far as Rs. 100 were leviable as a fee for such permission. [Paras 22, 23 & 24]

(b) Interpretation of statutes — Power granted by statute — Exercise of.

It is advisable for authorities constituted by statute to give attention and to adhere to the language of the statute when exercising powers granted by the statute. [Para 15]

(c) Jurisdiction — Action of local bodies — A Court of law may interfere with the actions of a local body, which is a creature of statute, under certain circumstances. [Para 25]

(d) City of Karachi Municipal Act (17 [XVII] of 1933), S. 151 — Permission granted under, is not revocable. [Para 30]

Hakumatrai — for Plaintiffs.
S. H. Lulla — for Defendants.

Judgment. — The suit is for declaration that the conditions imposed in the permission granted to the plaintiff by the municipality newly to establish a factory are illegal, and that the Municipality is not entitled to recover for such permission under S. 151, City of Karachi Municipal Act, more than a single fee; for an injunction restraining the municipality from revoking the permission or recovering more than a single fee not exceeding Rs. 100 or such other reasonable fee, as may be determined by the Court, and for the refund of Rs. 3140 with interest being amount deposited with the municipality under protest.

[2] The facts of this case are not in dispute and are clear from the correspondence, resolutions of the Standing Committee and notes of the Chief Officer. In December 1942 the plaintiff wrote to the Chief Officer to say that they intended to establish and run a workshop for ship-building, ship-repairs and general engineering and requested the necessary license. In January the Chief Officer enquired what motive power would be used for running the workshop with the horse-power. In February the plaintiffs replied that the motive would be electricity and the total approximate horse-power would be 325 H. P.

[3] On the 9th of April a note was put up by the Chief Officer to the Standing Committee recommending that the permission applied for be granted under S. 151, Karachi Municipal Act, subject to the conditions mentioned below:

(1) That the licensee shall conform to the terms and conditions of the license to be issued by the Chief Officer in this behalf.

(2) That the Standing Committee reserve to themselves the right to revoke the permission at any time without assigning any reason therefor.

(3) That an annual fee shall be charged according to the following scale for the motors or engines employed by the firm from year to year:

Upto 5 H. P.	Rs. 10/-	p. a.
Over 5 H. P. but up to 20 H. P.	Rs. 20/-	"
Over 50 H. P.	Rs. 100/-	"

[4] The Standing Committee granted the permission subject to the conditions mentioned in the above note. In May the Chief Officer informed the plaintiffs that the permission was given subject to the conditions which are set forth above. The plaintiffs in July asked for a copy of the license which was to be issued by the Chief Officer, inquired whether they were to understand that the maximum fee chargeable was Rs. 100/- a year, and added that they considered annual fees unusual. In August the Chief Officer replied that annual fees at the rates already mentioned were charged when a single motor or an engine of over 50 H. P. was employed for the purpose of a factory, and he forwarded a copy of the license. This license is Ex. 6/9 and will be referred to later. Upon this the correspondence continued, the plaintiff contending that the fees were illegitimate and the Chief Officer or Deputy Chief Officer stating that this was the scale which applied to all factories. Finally by Ex. 6/38 dated 11-8-1945, the necessary notice of the suit was given.

[5] The plaint which follows the notice contended that S. 230 (3) of the Act allowed only a single fee and not an annual fee for a permission under S. 151 and that all the conditions in the permission were unreasonable, illegal and ultra vires. It also stated that the fees demanded were extortionate and were in the nature of a tax.

[6] The written statement contended that the permission had not been granted, or if granted it was conditional, and that the plaintiffs were estopped from disputing the conditions as they had started the factory and must be deemed to have agreed to the conditions. It was denied that the conditions were illegal or ultra vires.

[7] The following issues were framed:

(1) Whether a single fee is payable for permission granted to the plaintiffs under S. 151, City of Karachi Municipal Act?

(2) Whether the fees claimed to be paid annually by the defendants amount to a tax and whether such a tax is leviable by the defendants?

(3) Whether the conditions imposed by the permission are unwarranted, illegal, ultra vires, unreasonable and/or otherwise invalid? If so, what is the consequence? (paras 8 and 11 of the plaint.)

(4) Whether the defendants and/or their standing committee have absolute discretion in issuing the permission and/or in imposing any condition whatsoever when granting permission.

(5) Are the plaintiffs estopped from questioning such discretion and/or from disputing the fees or their quantum.

(6) Whether the fee of Rs. 1570/-imposed by the defendants is reasonable. If not, what would be the proper fee?

(7) Whether the plaintiffs are entitled to refund and/or interest? If so, to what amount and at what rate of interest?

(8) Whether the suit for declaration prayed for in para 17 (a) of the plaint is maintainable in view of S. 42, Specific Relief Act?

(9) Whether the suit for injunction prayed for in para 17 (b) of the plaint is maintainable in view of Ss. 54,55, 56 and 57, Specific Relief Act?

(10) General, including the question of costs.

[8] My findings are:

(1) Yes. (2) Yes. (3) Yes. The consequence is that these conditions are not binding upon the plaintiffs. (4) Yes; provided that the discretion is exercised reasonably and within the ambit of the Act. (5) No. (6) The fee imposed is not in accordance with the resolution of the Standing Committee. (7) Yes; the whole amount less Rs. 112/-; the rate of interest should be 6% upon the balance from the date of the deposit to the date of recovery. (8) Not pressed. (9) Not pressed. (10) As under.

[9] In Chapter XI of the Karachi Municipal Act, 1933, entitled 'Public Health and Safety' under the Part entitled 'Regulation of Factories and Trades' occur two relevant sections, viz. Ss. 151 and 155. These sections are as follows:

"151. No person shall (1) newly establish, or (2) remove from one place to another, or (3) re-open or renew after discontinuance for a period of not less than three years, or (4) enlarge the area or dimensions of any factory, workshop or bakery in any area other than an area set apart for the accommodation of industries by any Act, for the time being in force or by any local authority except with the permission of the Standing Committee and in accordance with the terms and conditions stated in such permission. Provided that no such permission shall be required in the case under clause (3) if during the period of discontinuance the machinery has not been removed from the place where the factory, workshop or bakery was originally established."

"155. (1) Except under and in conformity with the terms and conditions of a licence granted by the Chief Officer in accordance with general or special orders issued by the Standing Committee in that behalf no person shall—

(a) carry on within the City the trade or operation of a carrier;

(b) keep in or upon any premises, for any purpose whatever, any article specified in Part I of Sch. VII or any article specified in Part II thereof in excess of the quantity therein prescribed as the maximum quantity of such article which may at any one time be kept in or upon the same premises without a licence;

(c) keep in or upon any premises, except for domestic use, any article specified in Part III of Schedule VII;

(d) keep in or upon any building used or intended to be used as a dwelling-house or within fifteen feet of such building, any quantity of cotton exceeding four hundred-weights;

on hire, (iii) for any purpose for which any charge of remuneration is made or received, or (iv) for the sale of any produce thereof;

(f) carry on or allow to be carried on, in or upon any premises—(i) any of the trades specified in Part IV of Schedule VII or any operations connected therewith; (ii) any trade or operation which in the opinion of the Chief Officer is dangerous to life, health or property or likely to create a nuisance either from its nature, or by reason of the manner in which, or the conditions under which, the same may be carried on.

Explanation 1.—A person shall be deemed to have known that a trade or operation is, in the opinion of the Chief Officer, dangerous or likely to create a nuisance within the meaning of this paragraph, after written notice to that effect signed by the Chief Officer has been served on such person or affixed to the premises to which it relates.

Explanation 2.—(1) A person shall be deemed to carry on a trade or operation or to allow it to be carried on within the meaning of this paragraph if he does any act in furtherance of such trade or is in any way engaged or concerned therein as principal, agent, master or servant or in any other similar capacity. (2) It shall be in the discretion of the Chief Officer to grant a licence for any of the purposes referred to in sub-s. (1) subject to such restrictions or conditions as he shall think fit to prescribe, or to refuse to grant such licence. (3) Every person to whom a licence is granted by the Chief Officer under sub-s. (2) shall keep such licence in or upon the premises, if any, to which it relates. (4) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to apply to mills for spinning or weaving cotton, wool, silk or jute or to any other mill or factory which the Chief Officer with the previous approval of the Standing Committee may from time to time specially exempt from the operation thereof."

[10] In Chap. 14 entitled 'General Provisions for the carrying on of municipal administration' under the part headed 'licences and written permissions' occurs S. 230 which reads as follows:

"230. (1) Wherever it is prescribed that the permission of the corporation is necessary for the doing of any act, such permission shall (unless it is expressly provided otherwise) be in writing.

(2) A licence or permission given under this Act shall specify the period for which, and the conditions and limitations subject to which, it is granted, and shall be signed in the prescribed manner.

(3) For every licence or permission a fee may be charged at such rate as shall from time to time be fixed by the Chief Officer with the previous approval of the Standing Committee.

(4) Every person to whom a licence or permission has been granted shall produce it at all reasonable hours for inspection if required by the Chief Officer, or any officer authorized by him in this behalf.

(5) A licence or permission may at any time be suspended or revoked by the Chief Officer, if any one of its conditions or limitations is infringed or evaded by the person to whom it was granted, or if the said person is convicted of an infringement of any of the provisions of this Act in any matter to which the licence or permission relates.

(6) When any licence or permission is suspended or revoked, or when the period for which it was granted has expired, the person to whom it was granted shall be deemed to be without a licence or permission:

Provided that, pending the receipt of orders on his application, an applicant for the renewal of a licence or permission shall be entitled to act as if it had been renewed.

(7) The acceptance by or on behalf of the Corporation of the fee for a licence or permission shall not entitle the person paying the fee to the licence or permission.

(8) Every application for a licence or permission shall be addressed to the Chief Officer.

(9) Save in cases falling under Ss. 151 and 154, if the orders of the Corporation on an application for a licence or permission which complies with the provisions of the foregoing sub sections are not communicated to the applicant within six weeks from the date of receipt of the application by the Chief Officer, the applicant may act as if the licence or permission had been granted for the year or for any shorter period mentioned in the application."

Section 286 is the section providing for power to make rules and sub-s. (54) empowers rules to be made regarding the form of licences and notices issued under this Act and the authority entitled to sign or issue them. A notification (Ex. 11) contained rules made by the Corporation under Ss. 155 and 286 (54). The operative part is as under:

"The Chief Officer being of the opinion that the trade and operations connected with the manufacture of iron safe and with iron or tin workshops or foundry and with processes of glass levelling or polishing, stone grinding or cutting, marble cutting, grinding or polishing or metal cutting is dangerous or likely to create a nuisance within the meaning of paragraph (ii), Cl. (f) of sub-s. (1) of S. 155, City of Karachi Municipal Act, 1933, is pleased to direct that any of the above trades or any operation connected therewith shall not be carried on, except as mentioned below—

1. Except under a licence from the Chief Officer and in accordance with the terms and conditions of such license, no person shall carry on the trade and operations connected with the manufacture of iron safes and with iron or tin workshops or foundry and with processes of glass levelling or polishing stone grinding or cutting, marble cutting, grinding or polishing or metal cutting.

2. Such license shall be issued on payment of the prescribed fees and shall be current for one year only, but shall be renewable annually subject to the provisions of Rr. 4 and 11 below.

3. The entire business shall be confined to the aforesaid premises (which said premises are hereinafter referred to as the "licensed premises" namely number .... rooms or space measuring sq. ft.).

4. The trade shall be carried on with the least possible nuisance and on a written requisition by the Chief Officer in this behalf the licensee shall be bound to take steps immediately to abate the nuisance caused, to the satisfaction of the Chief Officer, failing which, the license shall be liable to be revoked.

5. The trade shall not be carried on either before 7-0 a. m. or after 8-0 p. m. (S. T.)

6. The licensee shall not carry on any licenseable trade other than that permitted under this license without obtaining a license from the Chief Officer for that trade

7. The licensee shall cause his license to be affixed in some conspicuous part of the premises.

8. Except with the previous permission of the Chief Officer, the license is not transferable either as regards the person to or the premises in respect of which it is granted.

9. The licensee shall inform the Chief Officer of the name or names of the agent or agents who will carry on the trade in his absence and who will be responsible for the due fulfilment and observance of the conditions of this license.

10. The licensee shall communicate forthwith to the Chief Officer any change in the name of agent or agents.

11. The licensee shall at all times during the continuance of the license be responsible for the due fulfilment and observance of all the conditions of the license and the provisions of the Act and of the rules as may be in force from time to time and in case of any infringement of or neglect or failure on the part of the licensee or any other person employed in or having any interest in the business to fulfil or observe any of the said conditions or provisions after his attention had been drawn in writing by the Chief Officer to such infringement, neglect or failure, the licensee shall be liable to prosecution and/or to suspension or revocation of his license.

12. The license shall also be liable to suspension or revocation, if the premises are so kept or the trade or any operation connected therewith is so carried on as to be in the opinion of the Chief Officer a source of nuisance or danger to life, health or property of persons residing in or resorting to the neighbourhood.

13. The licensed premises shall always be kept in a clean and sanitary condition and the licensee shall comply with any direction given by the Health Officer in this behalf.

14. Half yearly fees shall be chargeable in respect of licenses issued on or after 1st October, full yearly fees being payable in case of licenses issued before that date.

(Provided that on receipt of a written notice by the Chief Officer on or before 1st October that the trade has been discontinued on the licensed premises, the licensee shall be entitled to a refund of the proportionate license fee for the remaining half year provided on inspection the trade is found to have been discontinued.")

[11] The portion in brackets has since been deleted. Ex. 13/2 is the table of fees dated 15-4-1936 fixed by the Chief Officer with the previous approval of the Standing Committee for licenses and permissions to be granted under the various provisions of the Act; and in Part 4 corresponding to S. 155 (1) (f) (i) the fee for casting metal with mechanical power is Rs. 15. Later in the same part at Serial No. 42 is the following item:

" Fees for trades under S. 155 (1) (f) (ii).

(a) Blacksmiths, tinsmiths, coppersmith, Glass levelling and Glass polishing ...	...	Rs. 6 p. a. per head.
(b) Iron safe manufacturing factories Iron and tin trunk works, sheet metal works, stone grinding and cutting, marble cutting, grinding and polishing or metal cutting—	Rs. 6	" "
(c) Goor (Jagree). ...	...	" "
For every bhathi big or small	Rs. 3	" "
(d) For special license for trades other than mentioned above	Rs. 3	" " "

Exhibit 12/1 a note by the Chief Officer for the Standing Committee reads as follows:

"No. 2163 Municipal Corporation, Karachi. Dated, 28-8-1941.

Note for the Standing Committee.

As required by S. 230 (3), I have the honour to request that approval of the Standing Committee to the fixation of License Fees as under for carrying on the business of cloth printing and for newly establishing a workshop or a Factory which is permitted by the Standing Committee under S. 151, City of Karachi Municipal Act, 1933, and which is worked with a mechanical power and for which no fee has been specifically prescribed or the fee already prescribed is less than that which is prescribed hereunder.

Licence Fees.

Upto 5 H.P.	Rs. 10/-P.A.
Over 5 H.P.	Rs. 20/-P.A."

The Standing Committee then asked for the full statements of license fees, and then by Ex. 12/3 the Chief Officer put up the following note:

" No. L. 2594 Municipal Corporation, Karachi. Dated 11-10-1941.

Note for the Standing Committee.

With reference to the Standing Committee's Resolution No. 800 dated 6-9-1941, I have the honour to submit herewith a statement of fees which are charged for keeping articles shown in parts II & III of Schedule 7 and for carrying on the trades and operations as shown in Part 4 of the said Schedule, as desired by the Standing Committee.

The fees as proposed in my Note No. L 2163 dated 28-8-1941 were for permissions granted by the Standing Committee under S 151 of the Act and for printing of cloth by machinery for which no fee was prescribed. But I will now suggest that the scale of fees should be divided in four classes as under instead of the two.

Upto 5 H P.	Rs. 10/- P.A.
Over 5 H P. but upto 20 H.P.	Rs. 20/- " "
Over 20 H P. but upto 50 H.P.	Rs. 50/- " "
Over 50 H.P.	Rs. 100/ " "

The above fees will be charged for all factories and workshops permitted under S. 151, but where these fees are lower than those already prescribed for trades and operations falling within Ss. 154 and 155, the latter will be charged.

Approval of the Standing Committee is therefore requested to charge the proposed fees for printing of cloth by machinery and for permissions granted by the Standing Committee under S. 151 of the Act, subject to the conditions set forth above"

This above proposal of the Chief Officer was approved by resolution of the Standing Committee on 1-11-1941.

"No. L 3125 Municipal Corporation, Karachi. Dated 9-12-1944.

As required by S. 230 (3), I have the honour to request approval of the Standing Committee to the revision of fixation of license fees, as under. The new rates will come into force from 1-4-1945.

This was approved by the Standing Committee.

[13] The form of license which was forwarded by the Chief Officer to the plaintiffs in August 1943 is as follows:

"Karachi Municipal Corporation

Quarter .... Karachi, subject to the rules in force relating to such license, which are hereunder reproduced and subject to any amendment thereof Dated ..... 194 .

Standing Committee's Resolution No. 346 of 29-4-1943.

Deputy Chief Officer".

Below this are printed the rules which have already been set out above in Ex. 11, but it is to be observed that the heading of these rules is "Rules (under Ss. 155 and 286 (54)) read with S. 151." The words" read with S. 151" are not printed, but are written in ink.

[14] The company has paid separate fees for its operations which come under the designation of metal casting, and it is common ground that it pays property taxes, water-tax etc., and for various storage licenses.

[15] Turning to issue No. 1, I consider it obvious, with all respect to Mr. Lulla's argument to the contrary, that newly establishing a factory is not a continuing process like carrying on a trade. Section 230 (2) provides that a permission shall specify the period for which it is granted. In the case of newly establishing a factory this merely connotes that the establishment must take place within the period specified by the permission: it does not mean that in addition to establishing a factory within the period specified by the original permission fresh retrospective permissions or extensions of the original permission are to be obtained so long as the factory continues to work. No period was specified in the permission granted by the Standing Committee, but it was tacitly assumed by both parties in argument that by the mention of an annual fee it was implied that the period was to be from year to year, and that the renewal of the permission from year to year was dependent on the payment of a fee each year. It is advisable for authorities constituted by statute to give attention and to adhere to the language of the statute when exercising powers granted by the statute. The Municipal authorities concerned did not pay attention to the expression "newly establish", nor did they specify the period. Had they done so, they could hardly have avoided seeing that what the Chief Officer proposed was inconsistent with the Act; for, paraphrased in terms of the Act, what the Standing Committee did was to give the following permission:" We permit you to newly establish a factory. The period for which the permission is granted is for as many years as you work the factory. You must pay an annual fee". It seems obvious that once a factory has been established with permission, then the expiry of the permission cannot convert retrospectively such an establishing into an establishing without permission. The answer to a prosecution is clear: "We did establish with permission." The Municipal authorities have fallen into the same mistake as was pointed out by my learned brother O' Sullivan in A. I. R. 1945 Sind 116[1]: there the municipality was empowered to charge a fee for putting up a projector, but as my learned brother held, was not empowered to charge a recurring fee for the continuing use of a projector.

[16] As for the argument that annual fees should be regarded as instalments of a single fee, a short answer is that the amount of the single fee is not specified and that the annual fees recur indefinitely. Mr. Lulla also argued that an annual fee was leviable as a condition under S. 151; the levying, however, of a fee is governed by S. 230, and the conditions contemplated by S. 151 have nothing to do with the levying of a fee for a permission under S. 151.

[17] Mr. Lulla again argued that the words "in this behalf" which occur in the permission, referred not to S. 151, but to S. 155 and that the real intent was to make a condition that the plaintiff should take out a license under S. 155. If, however, plaintiff's trade fell within S. 155, then such a condition was unnecessary: if it did not, then such a condition was not warranted by the Act. It may be pointed out that the department concerned appears to have been mistaken about the true position: EX. 6/9, the license, is really referable to S. 155 only, but the department has written in ink "read with S. 151." The conditions of this license pertain to the carrying on of an obnoxious trade, not to the new establishing of a factory. This same confusion is apparent in the notes of the Chief Officer regarding the levying of fees under S. 151. Each of the notes treats the newly establishing of a factory as if it were a continuous process, like the carrying on of an obnoxious trade, or in fact as if establishing a factory was the carrying on of an obnoxious trade. In the letter signed by the Chief Officer himself, EX. 6/22 sent to the plaintiffs is the following passage:

"License fee according to the strength of the machinery employed by each owner is levied on all such factories without exception. The maximum amount of license fee is Rs. 100/- only per machine which is not excessive. The license fee is paid for the right to ply a licensable trade and which has to be controlled and supervised by Municipal Agency. This is one of the biggest workshops established in Karachi.

Single fee cannot be recovered in this case as the fee fixed is annual. This does not fall under S. 155 and as such fee under that section cannot be recovered as the permission granted for establishing the workshop is under S. 151 as stated above."

[18] It is indeed remarkable to find within the span of a few lines two such inconsistent statements: (a) "the license fee is paid for the right to ply a licensable trade" and (b) "the permission granted is under S. 151."

[19] A further argument was that the fees could have been fixed under S. 155 and that effect should be given to the resolution as if it fixed the fees not under S. 151, but under S. 155 (1) (f) (ii). This was not the case in the written statement, and secondly the plaintiff has paid separate fees under S. 155 (1) (f) (i).

[20] The truth of the matter is that the Municipal authorities overlooked the distinction between Ss. 151 and 155, and sought to impose a recurring impost in return for permission to establish a factory as if establishing a factory meant carrying on a factory.

[21] Issue No. 2.—Since an annual fee is not permitted as has been said above it would appear to follow that an annual fee is in the nature of a tax. Whether it is termed an annual fee or a tax, in either case it is not warranted by the Act. The question whether the fees levied on each machine constitute a tax does not thus arise necessarily for decision, but the authorities quoted by Mr. Hakumatrai, 5 Rang. 212,[2] 51 Mad. 876[3] and 56 ALL. 241,[4] shew that a municipality is not entitled to regard and use fees as a method of taxation, and obviously the raising of a fee from Rs. 6 for metal cutting to over Rs. 1,000 suggests an impost calculated according to capacity to pay rather than according to the cost to the municipality.

[22] Issue No. 3.—The first condition purports to delegate authority to the Chief Officer to lay down terms and conditions, and is thus inconsistent with the language of S. 151, since it is not for the Chief Officer, but for the Standing Committee to lay down terms and conditions.

[23] The second condition is that the Standing Committee reserve to themselves the right to revoke the permission at any time without assigning any reason therefor. This is, in my opinion, an unreasonable condition. If it means what it says, then the Standing Committee could wait till the plaintiffs erected their factory and a day after its erection it could without any reason known to the plaintiff revoke the permission; or, it could wait for thirty years and then turn round and say that the permission was revoked. Section 151 contemplates that conditions if any must be specified.

[24] The third condition is illegal except in so far as Rs. 100 are leviable as a fee for such permission. The plaint does not make a grievance of the fact that the department sought to recover a fee in respect of each motor. It was, however, only after the production in Court by the municipality of the Standing Committee's proceedings of 1941 that the true interpretation of the Standing Committee's resolution (EX. 6/5) granting permission to the plaintiffs to establish a factory could be ascertained by the plaintiffs; and it is noteworthy that in the correspondence the department had refused to supply a copy of the Chief Officer's note to the Standing Committee. There is not a word in the Chief Officer's notes to suggest that each motor was to have a separate fee levied in respect of it, and it seems obvious that such an intention would require very clear words. If separate motors were to be the unit for calculation of fees, then the municipality at once discriminated in favour of steam boilers as against separate electric motors. According to the true interpretation of the resolutions the Chief Officer had not been given power to assess fees upon each motor.

[25] Issue No. 4.—This issue is not necessary for the disposal of this case, but it is clear from the authorities that a Court of law may interfere with the actions of a local body, which is a creature of statute, under certain circumstances.

[26] Issue No. 5.—It is clear that from the start the plaintiffs disputed the terms of the permission. I cannot see that by their conduct in starting the factory they made any representation to the Standing Committee or let it to understand that they would accept terms and conditions which the Standing Committee or the Chief Officer were not authorised to impose.

[27] Issue No. 6.—The fee of Rs. 1570 has been reached by calculating the fees on separate motors. This was not the purport of the Chief Officer's note which underlay the resolution of 1941, and an increase from Rs. 100 to Rs. 1570 would prima facie appear unreasonable. It is true that the amount of a single fee may perhaps justifiably be more than that of an annual fee. In any case it is not for this Court to state what fees the municipality should impose. All that concerns the Court in this particular case is that the Standing Committee had authorised a levy of Rs. 100 only and that if a factory was established during the subsistence of the permission then the non-payment of fees in future clould not convert that establishment into a wrongful establishment.

[28] Issue No. 7.—Since the plaintiff under the threat of process deposited on 10-8-45 under protest with the municipality an amount to which the municipality is not entitled the plaintiff is entitled to a refund with interest at 6 per. cent per annum. Admittedly, Rs. 100 were due two years before the deposit was made and Mr. Hakumatrai is willing to pay interest on Rs. 100 in return for interest on the balance of the deposit. Hence, Rs. 3128 were deposited in excess and the interest on this amount should run from 10-8-45 up to the date of recovery.

[29] Issues Nos. 8 and 9.—These issues were not pressed.

[30] Issue No. 10.—It is declared that the conditions imposed on the permission granted by the Standing Committee in its resolution (Ex. 6/5) upon the Chief Officer's note (Ex. 6/4) are illegal and not binding on the plaintiffs, except in so far Rs. 100 are leviable as a fee for such a permission. It is declared that the permission granted under S. 151 of the City of Karachi Municipal Act is not revocable. The defendants do pay the plaintiffs Rs. 3128 with interest thereon at 6 per cent. per annum from 10-8-1945 till the date of recovery and costs of the suit.

Srikrishindas H. Lulla—for Applicant.

Jamiatrai Lalchand—for Opponent.

Thadani J.—This is a revision application against the order of the learned Assistant Judge of Larkana who confirmed the order of the trial Judge, who had refused to entertain an application for setting aside an ex parte decree.

[2] The applicant Vatoomal son of Thanwerdas was a defendant in Suit No. 425 of 1941 instituted in the Subordinate Civil Court of Mehar, in which an ex parte decree was passed against him. The applicant then made an application under O. 9, R. 13, Civil P. C., to the trial Court for setting aside the ex parte decree. Before his application was decided, the applicant filed an appeal against the ex parte decree but his appeal was summarily dismissed by the District Court, Larkana. After the summary dismissal of the appeal, the applicant moved the trial Court to hear his application under O. 9, R. 13, Civil P. C., but the trial Court declined to hear the application on the ground that an appeal against the decree ex parte had been summarily dismissed. The applicant then filed an appeal against the order of the trial Court dismissing the application under O. 9, R. 13, Civil P. C. to the District Court, Larkana, and the District Court, Larkana, dismissed the appeal. It is against the order of the appellate Court dismissing the appeal that the applicant has come in revision.

[3] Mr. Lulla for the applicant contends that the trial Court was bound to hear and decide the application fo setting aside the ex parte decree, that the trial Court's refusal to decide it amounts to a failure to exercise jurisdiction vested in it by law. Mr. Lulla's argument is that the summary dismissal of an appeal under the provisions of O. 41, R. 11, Civil P. C., has not the effect of merging the decree of the trial Court into the decree of the appellate Court, as is evidenced by the fact that no decree is drawn up where an appellate Court summarily dismisses an appeal.

[4] The question for our consideration is whether the Court which has passed an ex parte decree is competent to deal with an application made to it for setting aside the ex parte decree when an appeal against the ex parte decree has been summarily dismissed by the appellate Court. Our view is that it is not competent.

[5] Mr. Lulla for the applicant has relied upon the decision of the Bombay High Court in 21 Bom. 548.[1] The question in that case, however, was whether the Court that passed the decree was competent to amend the decree after an appeal filed against the decree had been summarily dismissed.

[6] The facts of that case were these: The plaintiff had sued to establish his right to have a mortgage bond passed to him by the defendants registered to him under the Registration Act, 3 [III] of 1877. The defendants having denied execution before the Registrar, registration of the bond was refused. The Subordinate Judge found that the execution of the bond by the defendants was not proved and rejected the claim. On appeal the appellate Judge found that the execution of the bond by the defendants was proved, and he passed a decree reversing the decree of the Court below, and awarded the plaintiff's claim with costs. The defendants preferred a second appeal, but the High Court dismissed it under S. 551, Civil P. C. [Act XIV [14] of 1882] corresponding to O. 41, R. 11, Civil P. C. [Act V [5] of 1908.] The plaintiff then applied to the trial Judge for a review of the judgment on the ground that it was necessary that the decree should contain an order directing the registration of the document. The Judge ordered the decree to be amended as prayed for. The defendant then applied to the High Court contending that the decree of the Judge in appeal having been superseded by that of the High Court in second appeal, the Judge had no power to pass any order either under S. 206 or under S. 630, Civil P. C. of 1882.

[7] Mr. Lulla contends that the principle involved in the Bombay case is applicable to a case where an application is made to set aside an ex parte decree, and that when an appeal has been summarily dismissed under the provisions of O. 41, R. 11, Civil P. C., the decree of the trial Court is not affirmed, varied or reversed, and so remains intact, and that so long as it is not affirmed, varied or reversed, the Court that passed the ex parte decree must hear and decide an application to set it aside.

[8] The judgment of Farran C. J. in the Bombay case is a very short one and proceeds on the change of language made in 1888 in S. 551, Civil P.C. of 1882. But we do not think that the change of language made in 1888 in S. 551, Civil C. P. of 1882, has the effect of rendering a decree of summary dismissal passed by the appellate Court for the purposes of the Code of Civil Procedure, for instance S. 37, a nullity. Farran C. J. in his judgment has stated that it may be conceded that a dismissal of an appeal under S. 551, Civil P. C. of 1882 corresponding to O. 41, R. 11, Civil. P. C. of 1908, is a decree and is appealable. But the learned Judge says:

"Still it is clearly not one confirming the decree of the lower Court. It leaves the decree of the lower Court untouched, neither confirmed, nor varied, nor reversed."

[9] Many years later in 1921, Macleod C. J. in 23 Bom. L. R. 597[2] had occasion to consider the decision of Farran C. J. and it would appear from the judgment of Macleod C. J. that he did not regard the judgment of Farran C. J. in 21 Bom. 548[1] with approval. Macleod C. J. observed that:

"The fact that in 21 Bom. 548,[1] the High Court decided that an application to amend a decree, an appeal from which had been summarily dismissed, should be made to the lower Court, does not appear to decide the point before us. The Judges may very well have thought that an application to amend a decree under S. 206 of the Code of 1882 in the limited circumstances mentioned therein should be made to the Court which passed the decree, and not to the Court which summarily dismissed an appeal therefrom, and the ratio decidendi may have been that the decree of the lower Court continued to be the substantive decree, but that decision is not binding on us when having to determine an entirely different question, and it has been dissented from by the High Courts of Calcutta, Madras and Allahabad. There would be an end to all certainty in litigation if a case could be reopened in the lower Court after an appeal to the High Court had been disposed of. This was the view taken by the Calcutta High Court in 44 Cal. 1011."[3]

Before Macleod C. J. the question was whether the Court which passed the decree was competent to hear an application for review when an appeal against the judgment and decree of the trial Court had been summarily dismissed. We think it is obvious that very undesirable consequences might follow if an application under O. 9, R. 13, Civil P. C., is heard by the Court that passed an ex parte decree, after the appellate Court has summarily dismissed an appeal against the ex parte decree on its merits. For instance, if the Court that passed the ex parte decree were to hear an application under O. 9, R. 13, Civil P. C., after the appeal against the ex parte decree has been dismissed summarily, there is nothing to prevent it from allowing the application and then dismissing the plaintiff's suit. We would then have two decrees, one of the appellate Court summarily dismissing the appeal against the ex parte decree thereby keeping in tact the decree in which the plaintiff has succeeded in his claim and another decree passed by the trial Court in respect of the same subject-matter between the same parties in which the plaintiff's suit stands dismissed. In none of the cases upon which Mr. Lulla has relied has this aspect of the case been considered.

[10] In 11 Pat. 409,[4] also the question of summary dismissal of an appeal was considered in relation to the forum in which an application for amendment would lie. The learned Judges relied upon 21 Bom. 548[1] but made no reference to the later decision of the Bombay High Court in 23 Bom. L. R. 597[2] in which the soundness of the decision in 21 Bom. 548[1] was doubted.

[11] We think the following observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in 14 M. I. A. 465[5] at p. 490, furnish a guide in interpreting an order of summary dismissal of an appeal under O. 41, R. 11, Civil P. C. notwithstanding the fact that many years later a change was made in the language of S. 551, Civil P. C., 1882. Their Lordships said:

"The function of an appellate Court is to determine what decree, the Court below ought to have made. It may affirm, reverse or vary the decree under appeal. In the first case, it leaves the original decree standing superadding, it may be, an order for the payment of the costs of the appeal, or for interest on the amount originally decreed. In the other two cases it substitutes other relief for the relief originally given."

[12] We think, then the simple way to look at an order passed under O. 41, R. 11, Civil P. C., summarily dismissing an appeal is to see whether the order of summary dismissal leaves the original decree standing, and if it does, it amounts to an affirmation of the decree. In our view, where an appeal is filed and the judgment of the trial Court is before the appellate Court, and the appellate Court hears arguments of the appellant's advocate and considers the judgment and then takes the view that it will serve no useful purpose to issue notice to the respondent, and decides to dismiss the appeal summarily, the judgment of summary dismissal affirms the decree of the trial Court in the words of their Lordships to which we have referred. It is, we think, upon the strict adherence to the interpretation as put by their Lordships of the Privy Council upon the functions of an appellate Court that the possibility of conflicting decisions which we have indicated can be avoided.

[13] There must be some object whereby under O. 41, R. 11 (3), Civil P. C., the dismissal of an appeal under R. 11 shall be notified to the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred. We think the object is to be gathered from the language of S. 37, Civil P. C. Section 37, Civil P. C., says:

"The expression 'Court which passed the decree', or words to that effect, shall, in relation to the execution of decrees unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context, be deemd to include, (a) where the decree to be executed has been passed in the exercise of appellate jurisdiction, the Court of first instance....."

As the executing Court of an appellate decree is the Court of the first instance, it is sufficient to notify to the Court of the first instance that the appellate Court has summarily dismissed the appeal from its decree, and the Court of the first instance could then execute the decree of summary dismissal which in effect is its own decree.

[14] In view of S. 37, Civil P. C. read with O. 41, R. 11 (3), Civil P. C., we do not think it is necessary to say that a decree passed by the trial Court is merged in the decree of the appellate Court when the appellate Court dismisses the appeal. Indeed, we think there is no difference between an order summarily dismissing an appeal and a judgment affirming a decree of the lower Court on appeal under O. 41, R. 32, Civil P. C., in the matter of the execution of decrees. In either case, S. 37, Civil P. C., applies. We think this view is in conformity with the words used by the Privy Council to which we have referred.

[15] Two other cases to which Mr. Lulla has invited our attention are 16 Luck. 697[6] and A. I. R. 1933 Nag. 117[7]. Neither of these cases however, deals with an application under O. 9, R. 13, Civil P. C.

[16] The only case which Mr. Lulla has been able to refer to us and which deals directly with the point is the one reported in A. I. R. 1927 Mad. 722,[8] where Curgenven J. took the view that the trial Court had jurisdiction to entertain an application to set aside an ex parte decree even after the dismissal of the defendant's appeal against the same ex parte decree. The learned Judge thought that the language of O. 9, R. 13, Civil P. C., which enables a defendant to "apply to the Court by which a decree was passed for an order to set it aside" would appear to reserve that power even after an appellate decree has beed passed. We are unable to see any such reservation in the language of order 9, Rule 13, Civil P. C. As we have observed, if such a power were still reserved and the trial Court exercised that power to set aside the ex parte decree, and then nonsuited the plaintiff, an extraordinary result would follow, a result which could never have been in the contemplation of the framers of the Civil Procedure Code. Curgenven J. appears to have been influenced by the decision of an earlier decision of the Madras High Court in A. I. R. 1922 Mad. 33,[9] in which it was held that even where a defendant has been a party to an appeal which has been disposed of, an application by him to set aside an ex parte decree does not lie in the appellate Court but ought to be filed in the first Court.

[17] We have referred to this case and we think, in one sense, it is against the contention of the applicant. Ramesam J. said at pages 33-34:

"We must remember that in the discussion of this question it must be assumed that the defendant who was absent in the first Court appeard in the appellate Court for if he was absent in the appellate Court also under O. 41, R. 17 (2) an application to set aside the appellate ex parte decree would lie under O. 41, R. 21 and Art. 169 (not Art 164), Limitation Act, would apply. On this assumption, it is difficult to describe the appellate decree as an ex parte decree of the appellate Court except by a straining of language which is not justified; and if it can be so described, the petitioner would have a second period of limitation under Art. 164 starting from the appellate decree—an anomalous result which could hardly have been intended by the legislature. It may be urged by the petitioner that, it is equally anomalous if the first Court has jurisdiction to set aside an ex parte decree after it is affirmed by the appellate Court. But, in reply to this apparent anomaly, I would urge two considerations: (1) an application after the disposal of the appeal, to set aside the ex parte decree of the first Court can hardly be in time and can arise very rarely. The Legislature might well have been content not to anticipate and provide for a case which is most unlikely; (2) in such cases the proper course of the applicant would be not to wait till the disposal of the appeal but to get an adjournment of hearing of the appeal to enable him to apply before the first Court to set aside the ex parte decree."

The case in A. I. R. 1924 Cal. 830,[10] is distinguishable by reason of the fact that the appeal in that case was not summarily dismissed but dismissed for default.

[18] We will now refer to the cases in which this particular contention of the applicant has been negatived.

[19] In A. I. R. 1937 Nag. 381,[11] Niyogi and Pollock JJ. considered this aspect of the case, and came to the conclusion that where an appellate Court has judicially considered the grounds impeaching the correctness of the decree under appeal and dismissed the appeal by an order which, so far as that Court is concerned, is conclusive, the dismissal of the appeal under Order 41, Rule 11, Civil P. C., supersedes the decree of the trial Court. The facts of that case are identical to the facts before us. In that case, the defendant applied to the trial Court to set aside an ex parte decree under order 9, Rule 13, Civil P. C., and at the same time filed an appeal against the ex parte decree. The appeal was dismissed under Order 41, Rule 11, Civil P. C., and later the trial Court dismissed the application under O. 9, R. 13, Civil P. C., on the ground that the ex-parte decree had been superseded by the decree of the appellate Court.

[20] In A. I. R. 1937 Cal. 518,[12] the view taken was that an ex parte decree retains its character as an ex parte decree until the appellate Court has determined the rights of the parties. After such determination by the appellate Court the decree of the trial Court ceases to exist. It is true that in this case, the appeal was not summarily dismissed under O. 41, R. 11, Civil P. C., but we can see no difference in principle in the matter of an adjudication resulting from a summary dismissal of an appeal and that resulting from the affirmation of the decree of the trial Court under O. 41, R. 32, Civil P. C.

[21] In 37 ALL. 208,[13] Chamier and Piggott J.J. also took the view that it is not open to the Court which passed the ex parte decree to entertain an application to set it aside.

[22] In 24 Cal. 759,[14] Macpherson and Ameer Ali JJ. did not accept the contention that a dismissal under S. 551 of the Code of 1882, corresponding to O. 41, R. 11 of the Code of 1908, was not a decree or an adjudication of the rights of the parties. The learned Judges observed (p. 762):

"It is true that the Court, acting under S. 551 is not in a position to deal fully with the appeal or to make any alteration in the judgment or decree appealed against. Nevertheless, it is a determination and a final determination of the appeal and it adjudicates on the questions raised by the appellant so far as it is necessary to adjudicate upon them for the purposes of the appeal, and we can see no distinction between an appeal, which is dismissed under S. 551 and an appeal which is dismissed under any other section of the Code after full hearing. The case in 3 Mad. 1,[15] supports this view. Rightly or wrongly it is the practice of this Court not to draw up decrees in cases dismissed under S. 551, or in the case of a second appeal, when the decree is one of dismissal, to record anything in the decree more than that the appeal is dismissed. But the effect practically is to make the decree which is confirmed, the final decree to be executed in the suit, and there can be no question that this Court has power to amend the decree which has been in effect confirmed by it so as to bring it into conformity with the judgment which is also confirmed."

[23] Our conclusion, then, is that the Court which passed the ex parte decree is not competent to entertain an application under O. 9, R. 13, Civil P. C., when an appeal against the ex parte decree has been summarily dismissed.

[24] The result is that the revision application is dismissed with costs.

First Appeal No. 11 of 1942, Decided on 5-5-1947, against decree of First Class, Sub-Judge, Shikarpur, D/- 7-12-1941.

(a) Limitation Act (1908), Art. 14 — "Act or order"— Preparation and submission of scheme by Manager Incumbered Estates — Sind Encumbered Estates Act, 2 [II] of 1896.

The preparation and submission of a liquidation scheme under S. 17 (1), Sind Encumbered Estates Act, is a statutory duty and cannot be regarded as an act or order within the meaning of Art. 14. Where, therefore, the Manager, Encumbered Estates, includes a certain immovable property in the estate of the estate owner as belonging to him and as mortgaged by conditional sale, a suit by the alleged conditional vendee to establish the nature or extent of his right to the property is not governed by Art. 14 : A. (b) Sind Encumbered Estates Act (2 [II] of 1896), S. 17 (1)—Liquidation scheme—Certain property included in scheme – Alleged conditional vendee of property —Right of suit.

The liquidation scheme prepared and submitted in pursuance of S. 17 (1) pertains to the determination of debts and liabilities of the estate-owner and the manner in which it is proposed to pay them. It makes no reference whatever to rights over immovable property, and S. 12 deals with procedure in the matter of the notification of claims and not rights to immovable property against the estate-owner. Therefore, where the Manager, Encumbered Estates, includes an immovable property in the scheme as belonging to the estate-owner and as mortgaged by conditional sale, the alleged conditional vendee is not bound to challenge the inclusion within six months from the date of the publication of the order of management and it is open to him to establish the nature or extent of his right to the property by a suit : 2 Sind Sadar Court, Selected Decisions, P. 88. Rel. on. [Paras 5, 7 and 8]

Thadani J. — This is an appeal from the decision of the learned First Class Subordinate Judge of Shikarpur in which he decreed the suit of one Kanayalal son of Bharomal for a declaration and injunction, with costs, against the Manager, Encumbered Estates in Sind.

[2] The facts material to the appeal are these: On 4-5-1933 one Rattanmal Shalumal sold survey number 742 measuring some four acres to one Sukhumal Tharumal for a sum of Rs. 5,000. Three years later, on 22-6-1936, and after the death of Rattanmal, Sukhumal sold it to Kanayalal Bharomal for the same amount. Both the conveyances were by registered sale-deeds.

[3] Shortly after the death of Rattanmal, his son Naumal went under the protection of the Manager, I. E. in Sind. In due course, a liquidation scheme was sanctioned on 5-4-1938 by the Revenue Commissioner for Sind which showed that the estate comprised 79-Ac 4½-Gh. of agricultural land situated in Talukas Shikarpur and Garhi Yasin. The net liability against the estate taken under the management was Rs. 2668 at the close of the year 1936-37. In regard to the land in suit situated in Shikarpur Taluka, the report of the Manager, I. E. in Sind is as follows:

"The land in this Taluka comprises one survey number only measuring four acres. It was sold conditionally by the estate owners' father before management to one Sokhumal who again sold it to one Kanayalal on the same terms. The conditional vendees have not filed any claim yet in spite of a notice to them to do so. They will be evicted under S. 21 on the passing of liquidation scheme and the survey number leased out."

[4] On 3-7-1939 the land in suit was leased out by the Manager. Two years later, on 21-2-1941, Kanayalal filed a suit in the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge, Shikarpur, against the Manager and the heirs and legal representatives of Rattanmal for a declaration and injunction alleging that the property in suit was not the subject matter of any mortgage by conditional sale either in 1933 or 1936 and sought to restrain the Manager from interfering with his possession.

[5] The defence of the Manager, I. E. in Sind was that Rattanmal who was an agriculturist had sold the property in suit to Sukhumal subject to a contemporaneous oral agreement which rendered the transaction a mortgage by conditional sale, and that Kanayalal's claim for the return of Rs. 500 paid as consideration was barred under the provisions of the Sind Incumbered Estates Act, as he had failed to make a claim within six months from the date of the publication of the order of management in the Sind Government Gazette. Many other defences were taken to which it is not necessary to refer. On the pleadings, the learned trial Judge framed the following issues:

1. Is the suit time barred? 2. Is the plaint not sufficiently stamped? 3. Has the Court no jurisdiction to try this suit? 4. Whether the plaintiff has no right to sue? 5. Is the suit not maintainable in the form in which it has been brought? 6. Is the suit bad for multifariousness? 7. Is the suit barred by Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act X of 1876? 8. Is the suit barred by the decision of defendant 1, and the Revenue Commissioner? 9. Is the suit barred by S. 42, Specific Relief Act? 10. Was Rattanmal Shalumal an agriculturist? 11. Whether the sale-deed executed by Rattanmal Shalumal was not an out and out sale but a mortgage by way of conditional sale? 12. Has the plaintiff purchased the property in suit from Sukhumal? If so, is the transaction collusive and mala fide? 13. Is the plaintiff entitled to the declaration and injunction sought? 14. Whether notice given to defendant 1 is legal? If not what is the consequence? 15. What should the decree be?

[6] Mr. Keshowdas who appears for the Manager, I. E. in Sind, has questioned the finding of the learned trial Judge on issues 1 and 11 only. It is argued by Mr. Keshowdas that as the Manager, I. E. in Sind, included the property in suit in the estate of the deceased Rattanmal, the suit should have been filed within twelve months of 17-3-1938 under Art. 14, Limitation Act. In support of his argument Mr Keshowdas has relied upon the case in A. I. R. 1930 Sind 150.[1] But we do not think the preparation and submission of a liquidation scheme can in any way be regarded as an act or an order within the meaning of Art. 14, Limitation Act The preparation and submission to the Commissioner of a liquidation scheme is a statutory duty; it is neither an act nor an order.

[7] The liquidation scheme prepared and submitted in pursuance of S. 17 (1), Sind Incumbered Estates Act, 1896, pertains to the determination of debts and liabilities of the estate-owner and the manner in which it is proposed to pay or discharge them. It makes no reference whatever to rights over immovable property, and S. 12 deals with procedure in the matter of the notification of claims and not rights to immoveable property against the estate-owner.

[8] It is impossible to accept Mr. Keshowdas' contention that as the Manager, I. E. in Sind, included the property in suit as belonging to the estate-owner, and mortgaged by conditional sale, Kanayalal, the alleged conditional vendee, was bound to challenge the inclusion and that as he had failed to do so, it was not open to him to establish the nature or extent of his right to the immovable property by a suit.

[9] This aspect of the case has been fully considered by Batty J. in 2 Sind Saddar Court, Sel. Dec. at p. 88.[2] After analysing the relevant sections of the Sind Incumbered Estates Act, 2 [II] of 1896, Batty J. observed:

"There is no indication of any intention to confiscate titles, and the whole spirit of the Sections hereinbefore examined manifestly limits the operations of the Act to the management of the debtor's property, and does not extend to any property already vested in anybody else. Section 9 is, perhaps, still more explicit and unmistakable in prescribing the effect of an order of management. It declares (1) that all proceedings then pending. . . in respect of the debts and liabilities mentioned in S. 8 shall be stayed, and the operation of all processes etc. then in force for such debts and liabilities shall be suspended, and (2) that so long as the management continues no fresh proceedings etc, shall be instituted, etc., in respect of such debts and liabilities, (3) the power of the debtor shall be restricted, and (4) no person other than the Manager shall be competent to mortgage, charge, or lease such property or any part thereof. In this suit, sub-sections (1) and (2) of S. 9 require special consideration. They relate only to proceedings, etc., in respect to the debts and liabilities mentioned in S. 8, i e., debts and liabilities to which the debtor is subject, or which are charged on the whole or any part of his immovable property. Now, debts and liabilities to which the debtor alone is subject are plainly debts and liabilities for which he is personally liable, and which can only be enforced against him in personam such as unsecured debts, liabilities arising from b each of contract or from torts, and the like. And this class requires no consideration in the present instance, for so far as the claims for accounts and other money liabilities are concerned there is no dispute that the proceedings have been properly stayed. For the sub-section to apply to the proceedings on any other ground, it would have to be shown that the claim was either for a debt or a liability charged on the whole or some part of the debtor's immovable property. Now, here the contention is not that property belonging to the debtor is subject to a debt or a liability, but that certain property is not the property of the debtor at all, that is, not his, not that it is his, subject to certain debts and liabilities, but that he has no title to it, and that no one else can claim it, or manage it or apply it to the satisfaction of his debts on his behalf . . . The liability of an estate is clearly a distinct thing from the title to, i. e. the right of ownership in, an estate, and none of the terms used in the paragraph last preceding could, with any shadow of meaning, be associated with any phrase that included a complete adverse proprietary title. . . . . It is incredible that the Legislature intended to impose such a limitation on the proprietary rights of any person who had not consented thereto by application, for otherwise there would have been no necessity for requiring such an application as the preliminary to action under the statute. It is, therefore also incredible that the Legislature intended that every man whose property the manager might, by inadvertence or on misrepresentations made, have taken under his control should be deprived, even when the management had ceased, of the ordinary rights of an owner. To turn from the Act to the authorities cited in argument, it is to be observed that nothing in Act (15[XV]of 1871) has been pointed out which would show that the decision in 5 Bom. 135,[3] relating to that Act, would be inapplicable in cases to which the S. I. E. Act, 1896, applies. . . . . That is to say, the manager has no power to decide whether certain property claimed by his debtor belongs to that debtor or to somebody else."

We entirely agree with the view of Batty J. The learned trial Judge was right in holding that Art. 14, Limitation Act, had no application to an act or order of the manager which attempts to affect title to immovable property. (The rest of the judgment is not necessary for the purpose of report.)

Grant—Resumption—Grant of land resumable for 'public purpose'—Manufacture of salt, whether 'public purpose'—Employment of private agency to carry out public purpose, if affects nature of purpose.

The phrase 'public purpose' must include a purpose that is an object or aim, in which the general interest of the community as opposed to the particular interest of the individuals, is directly and vitally concerned: 1 A. I. R. 1914 P. C. 20, Foll. [Paras 4, 5]

By an agreement contained in a resolution, the Government granted certain land to the Karachi Corporation as a concession, the Government reserving the right to resume any part of the land forming part of the concession for a public purpose on certain terms. The Government resumed certain portion of the land for the expansion of the salt manufacture:

Held that the increase in the production of salt, a vital commodity for the life of the community, was manifestly a public purpose and the means whereby that public purpose was achieved either through the departmental action of the Government or the energy and effort of private enterprise, did not materially affect the essentially public nature of the purpose. Kimatrai Bhojraj—For Appellant.

Fatehchand Assudamal and Tikamdas Wadhumal —for Respondents Nos. 1 and 2 respectively.

Davis C. J.—This is an appeal from a judgment of Thadani J. of this Court, sitting in his original jurisdiction, in which he dismissed with costs a suit brought by the Municipal Corporation of Karachi against the Province of Sind and Messrs. Eduljee Dinshaw, a firm engaged in the manufacture of salt.

[2] It appears that on 3rd November 1873 the Government of Bombay in the Revenue Department, passed a resolution No. 6072 regarding certain concessions proposed to be made by the Government of Bombay to the then Municipality of Karachi. The material clause of that resolution is clause 8 and is as follows:

"On the completion of the survey, Government is to have the right to set apart for the present and prospective wants of the state whatever additional land they may think proper, and to repossess themselves thereafter of land in the possession of the municipality which may be required for a public purpose on payment of the value of buildings which may have been erected and other improvements effected."

and in pursuance of the powers reserved by this clause the Government of Bombay in March 1936 resumed an area of 159.86 acres, part of the foreshore and part of the land, contained within this concession granted by Government to the municipality. The Municipal Corporation of Karachi was slow to bring a suit against Government; for nearly seven years elapsed before the suit out of which this appeal arises was instituted, and it is now the contention of the appellant, the Municipal Corporation of Karachi, that Government did not repossess themselves of the land in suit for a public purpose; for the land when once repossessed by Government was granted to a private firm, namely, the firm of Messrs. Eduljee Dinshaw for the purpose of manufacturing salt and for the purpose of manufacturing salt for private gain; and it was alleged by the plaintiff, the Municipal Corporation, that this private firm made large profits and that anything recovered by the Province of Sind from this private firm under the terms and conditions of a license granted by the Province of Sind to this private firm should be paid over to the plaintiff Municipal Corporation.

[3] It was the contention of the province of Sind that it had the right to resume the land for a public purpose and that the expansion of salt manufacture in Karachi was such a purpose and that the Government of the Province of Sind was the sole judge of this question, whether the land was acquired for a public purpose and that in any case in fact it was so acquired and that it is immaterial if a license to manufacture salt is given to a private individual or to a corporation even though it should appear the individual or corporation may make a profit and not suffer a loss. The Province of Sind also rebutted the claim of the Municipal Corporation to obtain possession of the land in suit, or to claim compensation for the land so resumed and they denied the right of the plaintiff Municipal Corporation to ask for an account of the dealings between itself and this firm of Eduljee Dinshaw. It was also contended that the suit was premature, in that, possession of land had not yet been given to this firm of Eduljee Dinshaw and that the suit was time-barred. We, however, think it so plain that this land was lawfully resumed by Government under its agreement with the Municipal Corporation of Karachi for a public purpose, that it is quite unnecessary for us to consider any claim for compensation, any question of accounts or any question of limitation.

[4] Now the argument on behalf of the appellant that this land was not acquired for a public purpose, appears to us to rest upon the view that merely because in carrying out a public purpose a private agency is employed by Government and that private agency may make some profit from its labours, therefore the purpose for which land has thus been acquired cannot be a public purpose. But we think the mere fact that the public purpose, which Government had in view when the land was acquired, is furthered or carried to its ultimate conclusion in serving the interests of the community by means of a private agency, which makes some profit, is immaterial. In 39 Bom. 279,[1] from which a part of the judgment of Lord Dunedin is quoted in the judgment of Thadani, J., it is said:

"The argument of the appellants is really rested upon the view that there cannot be a 'public purpose' in taking land if that land when taken is not in some way or other made available to the public at large. Their Lordships do not agree with this view. They think the true view is well expressed by Batchelor J., in the first case, when he says:

'General definitions are, I think, rather to be avoided where the avoidance is possible, and I make no attempt to define precisely the extent of the phrase 'public purposes' in the lease; it is enough to say that, in my opinion, the phrase, whatever else it may mean, must include a purpose, that is, an object or aim, in which the general interest of the community, as opposed to the particular interest of individuals, is directly and vitally concerned'."

"That being so, all that remains is to determine whether the purpose here is a purpose in which the general interest of the community is concerned. Prima facie the Government are good judges of that. They cannot say: 'sic volo sic jubeo' but at least a Court would not easily hold them to be wrong. But here, so far from holding them to be wrong, the whole of the learned judges, who are thoroughly conversant with the conditions of Indian life, say that they are satisfied that the scheme is one which will redound to public benefit by helping the Government to maintain the efficiency of its servants. From such a conclusion their lordships would be slow to differ, and upon its own statement it commends itself to their judgment."

[5] We do not see how it can be said that the increase of the supply of such a vital necessity for the health of the community at large, as salt is not a matter in which the general interests of the community as opposed to the particular interests of individuals are directly and vitally concerned. It is true of course that as time passes, political theory changes and the duties and responsibilities of the State towards its subjects are extended: so that today it is common knowledge that in some forms of society it is considered in the public interests that all sources of production and all means of distribution are matters for the State, to be controlled by the State in the general interests of the community at large. But we are not concerned here with the carrying out into actual practice of a political theory, however far advanced; we are concerned merely with the encouragement by the State of the production of salt which is a vital necessity of life. We cannot see, as we have said, merely because the public purpose is to be carried out, or the interests of the community as a whole are to be served by the efforts of private enterprize and that private enterprize may make some profit for itself, the essential public nature of the purpose is in any way affected, or doubt is cast in any way upon its existence. In the order of the Commissioner of Sind dated 2nd July 1935 it is stated that:

"the plot of land known as 'Novanal' admeasuring 159.86 acres situated at the Maurypur foreshore within the limits of the Karachi Municipality as shown in the Karachi Port Trust plan No. B. V./ Vii-65, dated 24-10-1934, is hereby resumed under clause VIII paragraph 10 of Government Resolution, Revenue Department, No. 6072 dated 3rd November 1873, being required for a public purpose, viz., the expansion of salt manufacture at Karachi."

[6] It is true that in the marginal note in the order of the Commissioner of Sind is written "Lands, Maurypur, Karachi : resumption of the area known as 'Novanal' for the Eduljee Dinshaw salt works". We scarcely think a marginal note in the order of the Commissioner of Sind is conclusive on the question as to whether the land is or is not acquired for a public purpose within the terms of the agreement made by the Government of Bombay with the Municipal Corporation when the land was granted as a concession to the Municipal Corporation. As the learned Judge in the trial Court points out, the manufacture of salt is a Government monopoly; no private individual can manufacture salt without a license; the licensee must pay to Government a fixed sum Rs. 1-9-0 for every maund of salt manufactured and sums so collected form part of the revenue of the Central Government: so that, it appears that two public purposes, and not one, are served: one public purpose is the increase in the supply of a necessity of life for the people at large and the second public purpose is the increase of Government revenue, which revenue is again to be used for the benefit and welfare of the community as a whole. The learned Judge says in his judgment that the manufacture of salt is for all practical purposes of State industry and as a State industry it is essentially an industry for a public purpose, indeed a national purpose, and as the land is to be resumed for this national industry, its resumption is necessary for a public purpose. The fact that an individual or corporation has been given a licence to manufacture salt does not affect the purpose of resumption. This statement of the learned Judge has been challenged by the learned advocate for the appellant on the ground that the manufacture of salt is not a State industry; it is merely an industry conducted under a licence granted by Government and that the manufacture of salt, for instance, is no more a State industry than is the manufacture and sale of liquor. But we do not think it is necessary to decide this question on the consideration whether the industry is or is not a State industry. We prefer to base our decision on the broader ground that the increase in the production of salt, a vital commodity for the life of the community, is manifestly a public purpose and the means whereby this public purpose is achieved either through the departmental action of Government or the energy and effort of private enterprize, does not materially affect the essentially public nature of the purpose in this case.

[7] It was argued before us and the argument was based on the judgment of the Privy Council that the Government are not the sole judges of whether a purpose is or is not a public purpose. It may well be it is in the public interest, that it is within the power of the Courts to scrutinize each case that comes before them and to decide upon the facts whether the powers of Government have been exercised in good faith in the interest of the public; that Government have not acted merely according to the phrase 'sic volo sic jubeo'. It may well be that it is in the public interests that the Courts may be in a position to pronounce in any case that comes before them, upon the good faith of Government and could, if the facts so justify, hold that the action of Government was a fraud upon the Act, and that the land acquired was not acquired for a public purpose. We, however, are not concerned, in this case, where the public nature of the purpose is so manifest, with considerations as to how far the Court can go in prohibiting, as it were, the action of Government in the acquisition of land. There is not a shadow of doubt in our minds that land has been properly resumed by Government within the terms of the agreement made between the Government of Bombay and the Municipal Corporation of Karachi, in terms of the resolution of the Government of Bombay dated 3-11-1873, and we think this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

[8] As we have said, it appears to us so plain that this land has been lawfully acquired by Government for a public purpose, that our decision on the other issues raised is unnecessary.

[9] The appeal is dismissed with costs accordingly. We think, this is a case where two sets of costs should be allowed and we order accordingly.

It is not necessary for an appellant to apply for a copy of the decree before the expiry of the period of limitation in order to have the advantage of the time that elapsed between the pronouncement of the judgment and the signing of the decree. Davis C. J.—This is an appeal against a judgment of Tyabji J. in Suit No. 276 of 1942, and the question we have first to consider is, whether the appeal was filed in time. Arguments were finished in this case on 1st November 1945, and the oral judgment was given in Court on 4th April 1946. The judgment was signed between 4th and 6th May the dates on which the transcript of the judgment was sent to the learned Judge and returned by him, but no decree was prepared until 8th August; and we know, as a matter of fact, an application for copies of the judgment and decree was made on 6th August and copies were ready on 9th September. The appeal was filed on 7th October: the appellant had 90 days from the date on which the judgment was pronounced in Court, that is to say, 3rd July. But it is claimed the appeal is in time because the appellant had not only the 90 days, but the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the decree. As the material section of the Limitation Act to be considered is S. 12 (2), I set it out at once; it reads:

"In computing the period of limitation prescribed for an appeal, an application for leave to appeal and an application for a review of judgment, the day on which the judgment complained of was pronounced, and the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the decree, sentence or order appealed from or sought to be reviewed, shall be excluded."

[2] It was argued before us that the time requisite for obtaining a decree, which term has been interpreted by the Privy Council as meaning "properly required", must at least include all time which elapsed until the decree is signed; for, the signing of the decree is in no way within the control of the appellant and it is a matter of no importance whether an application for a copy of the judgment and decree has been made before the decree was signed; for, even if it had so been made, the time requisite would in no way have been affected; indeed, until the decree is signed and a copy can be given, the application by the appellant for a copy is not material.

[3] On the other hand, it was argued that in accordance with a series of Sind rulings and indeed with a series of Bombay rulings until recently modified, the date when the application was made for a copy of the decree is a matter of very great importance indeed, even though the decree had not been signed and a copy could not have been given. For, it was held that stress should be laid on the word "obtaining" rather than on the word "requisite"; that it cannot be said that any time could be requisite for obtaining a copy of the decree before an application for a copy had been made: so that if an application for a copy of the decree had not been made within the 90 days, it mattered not whether the application could have been granted or not by reason of the existence or non existence of the decree, if the appellant was to save time and to add, as it were, to the 90 days the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the decree; an application before the expiry of the 90 days was vital. The case that it is necessary for an application for a copy of the decree to be made before the expiry of the period of limitation, be it 20, 30 or 90 days, has been most forcefully put by Mahmood, J., in 12 ALL. 461.[1] Mahmood J. said:

"Now, in the first place I entertain no doubt that it is necessary and indispensable for a litigant who intends to appeal from a decree which is the result of a judgment against him, and which decree must, under the law, bear the date on which the judgment was pronounced, to apply for a copy of the decree and, if necessary, of the judgment also, before the lapse of the period of limitation for the appeal which he intends to file, whatever that period may be. This view is amply supported by the ruling of Garth, C. J. (Cunninghan J. concurring) in 10 Cal. 652,[2] which was an appeal from a decree passed on the original side of the High Court and was therefore governed by the 20 days' limitation under Art. 151, Limitation Act. In that case the decree had remained unsigned for more than the period of limitation, and the appellant subsequently applied for and obtained a copy of the decree. It was there contended on behalf of the appellant 'that where the decree was not drawn up and signed until after 20 days had expired from the delivery of the judgment, the 20 days ought to count from the time when the decree was made." In dealing with this contention, Garth C. J. said (at pp. 659-60):—'But this is directly contrary to the express language of the law. By Art. 151 of the schedule to the Limitation Act the 20 days are to be reckoned from the date of the decree; and by S. 205, Civil P. C., the decree is to bear date the day on which the judgment is pronounced, so that the appeal must clearly be filed within 20 days from the day on which the judgment is pronounced.' This rule must be read with the observation of Garth C. J. in the course of the argument, when he said 'if the appellant had applied for a copy while the 20 days were running he would not be barred,' and this is the effect of the judgment in the case."

"It appears to me upon general principles that it would be defeating the object of limitation to allow the would-be appellant to sleep over his right of appeal for more than the limitation period, and then by the accidental or unavoidable delay in the decree being prepared, to claim extension of the period of limitation for appealing from a decree for obtaining a copy of which he had not taken even the first step, by filing an application therefor. This construction is in my opinion supported by the words of the para. 2 of S. 12, Limitation Act, itself. The words referring to exclusion are 'the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the decree'. The words "requisite" and "obtaining" as they occur in the context seem to me to assume that some definite step ancillary to the obtaining, that is acquisition, is not only intended to be taken, but has already been taken. The first step for "obtaining" must be to take some step towards the obtainment, and the act of "obtaining" cannot be said to have been commenced before such step. Taking it to be a sound rule of interpretation to interpret the words of a statute in their ordinary and usual sense, unless the contrary is shown, I have consulted Webster's English Dictionary, and it explains the word "obtain" to mean "to get hold of by effort; to gain possession of; to acquire" as the ordinary sense of the word. In this sense I interpret the word 'obtaining' as it occurs in para. 2 of S. 12, Limitation Act, and hold that 'the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the decree' cannot refer to any period antecedent to the appellant's asking for a copy by the usual mode of applying therefor, or to any period subsequent to its being ready for delivery. If at the time when the application for a copy is made, the decree is not ready, he will of course be entitled to the allowance of such portion of time during which the decree remains unsigned, along with the time which may be occupied in preparing the copy for delivery; the reason being obvious that the act of obtaining has already commenced and the delay in such a case could not be referred to any omission or neglect on his part. But when he has made no application to obtain a copy and the decree remains unsigned for a portion of, or the whole period of, limitation, he cannot claim the benefit of a matter which in no sense and to no extent frustrated or retarded any endeavour on his part to obtain a copy of the decree, the endeavour itself not having yet commenced."

and this view commended itself to the learned Judges of the Bombay High Court in 23 Bom.

442,[3] and was followed by the Sind Judicial Commissioner's Court in 1 S. L. R. 71[4] in which quoting Parsons Acting C. J. and Ranade J., the learned Judges said :

"The time requisite for obtaining a copy must, in our opinion, be confined to the action of the party who wishes to obtain the copy and must be taken to commence only when he does something in order to obtain the copy and to end when he obtains the copy. We fail to see how any delay in signing the decree can be brought in to benefit a person who has not made an application to obtain a copy or how it can be said that the time, during which the delay lasted, was time requisite for him to obtain a copy . . . . . A party is at liberty to ask for a copy of the decree whether the latter is signed or not . . . . . It will be found, we think, in most cases that a party is quite ignorant when a decree is signed."

The learned Judges then go on to say, their own view is in complete accord with that of the learned Judges of the High Courts of Bombay and Allahabad.

[4] But in 39 Bom. L. R. 32,[5] the matter was referred to a Full Bench, and the learned Chief Justice was of the view that there was no justification, in the language of the section, for requiring the appellant to apply for a copy of the decree before the period of limitation had expired and the learned Chief Justice said :

"The decisions of this Court really amount to adding to S. 12 a proviso that application for copy of the decree has been made before the time limited for appeal by Art. 151 has expired, and the section contains no such proviso . . . . . It is difficult to see in such a case what advantage is to be gained by the appellant applying within twenty days from the date of the decree for a copy of the decree, when he well knows that the decree itself is not in existence, and cannot be copied."

The learned Chief Justice was of the opinion that the decisions imposing this restriction upon the appellant were inconsistent with the decision of the Privy Council in 55 I. A. 161,[6] that S. 12, Limitation Act confers a substantive right upon the appellant to the exclusion of the time specified. The learned Chief Justice went on to say :

"I am not, however, prepared to agree with the view which, I understand, the Calcutta High Court took in 59 Cal. 1215,[7] namely, that the requisite time for obtaining a copy of the decree in no case begins to run until the decree has been sealed."

The learned Chief Justice then goes on to make it plain that he is dealing with a special procedure in the High Courts of Calcutta and Bombay and that because of this the time required for drawing up the order is not in all cases necessarily to be included in the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the decree.

[5] Rangnekar J. was unable to agree with the view which he thought was taken by the Calcutta High Court that limitation begins to run from the date of the signing of the decree, but in view of the decision of the Privy Council in 49 I. A 307,[8] he was not prepared to differ from the Chief Justice.

[6] Kania J., in his judgment agreeing with the Chief Justice refers again to the case in 49 I. A. 307[8] and refers to a recent decision of the Patna High Court which formerly accepted the Bombay view, but came to a different conclusion in a later Full Bench case reported in 15 Pat. 284.[9] In that case a Bench of seven Judges considered the question as to whether time that elapsed between the date of the judgment, which is the date of the decree under the Civil Procedure Code and the time when the appellant applied for copies should be excluded in computing the period of limitation, it being argued that the time would not start to run in favour of the appellant until he had done something in the matter of obtaining a copy of the decree appealed from and this he should have done by applying for the copy at the earliest possible opportunity, even before the decree had been signed. In the particular case before the Full Bench of the Patna High Court, and indeed in the case before us, the appellant did apply for a copy of the decree before the decree had been signed, and, speaking for myself, I do not think it necessary for an appellant to apply for a copy of the decree before the expiry of the period of limitation under Art. 151, Limitation Act, in order to have the advantage of the time that elapsed until the date when the decree is signed. The learned Chief Justice of the Patna High Court in giving judgment said :

"The difference of opinion has arisen over the construction of the words in S. 12, sub-ss. (2) and (3) 'the time requisite for obtaining copy of the decree appealed from' and the choice is between two alternative constructions depending upon whether (a) the proper emphasis is upon the word 'requisite' so that the meaning is 'the time which would have been necessary in any case' or (b) whether the emphasis should be upon the word 'obtaining' with the result that the meaning is as though the words were 'the time actually employed by the appellant' and hence that no time preceding the application for copies by the appellant can be considered. In our opinion the former of these alternatives is the correct construction and that it is correct is shown by the observations of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in 55 I. A. 161.[6] The result is that no period which may be under the control of the appellant between the date upon which judgment is pronounced (which is the date of the decree under the Civil Procedure Code) and the date on which the appeal was filed can be considered as the time requisite within the meaning of S. 12. In most cases the decree of the trial Court follows upon the judgment without the parties being required to do anything in the interval and in such cases the appellant will be entitled to the exclusion of the time between the judgment and the decree."

Where, as in Calcutta and Bombay, something may be required to be done by the parties in order that the decree may be drawn up and signed, it may well be that one or other of the parties is guilty of delay or default and he may not be given the benefit of all the time that elapses between the date of the judgment and the signing of the decree. He will be excluded from the benefit of the time which elapsed and which was due to his own negligence or default, but we are not, in the case before us, concerned with a case of this nature: We are concerned with a case very similar to that before the Patna High Court, for in this case a copy of the decree was applied for on 6th August, the decree being signed on 8th August. This would, according to the Patna ruling and indeed in my view, according to the correct interpretation of S. 12 (2), Limitation Act, give the appellant the benefit of the time that elapsed from the date of judgment until the signing of the decree, and as no copy was supplied until 6th September, it is plain that when the time intervening between the day when the judgment is signed—one may assume the date to be 4th May—and the date when the decree was signed on 8th August, is added to the 90 days given to the appellant by the Limitation Act, this appeal is clearly within time.

[7] It was argued before us, the Privy Council had not before them this question as to whether the application for copies must be made before the time of limitation has expired, be it 20, 30 or 90 days, as the case may be. This is correct. Lord Buckmaster, delivering the judgment of the Board in 49 I. A. 307,[8] did state the facts of the Calcutta case in 13 Cal. 104[10] to which reference was made, and did set out the dates which showed that an application for a copy was made after the decree had been signed. Judgment was pronounced on 17th July; the decree was signed on 23rd July, and the application for a copy was made only on 3rd August. The point was not taken that application for a copy had to be made before the period of 20 days had elapsed, and indeed it would appear, this period of 20 days had not elapsed when the application for a copy was made on 3rd August. In 49 I. A. 307,[8] the period of 20 days from the date of the decree expired on 15th August and it was only on 28th August that the draft of the order was submitted. No steps, however, were taken to have the necessary order drawn up by the plaintiff nor by the defendants after it was competent for them to do so on the lapse of four days. Even when the plaintiff applied to have the order drawn up and the draft was sent to the appellant or defendant, he delayed and returned it only on 16th August; on 28th August it was signed and on 3rd September it was filed by the plaintiff. In the opinion of their Lordships, the appellant had taken no reasonable or proper steps to obtain a copy of the decree or order which would entitle him to the benefit of S. 12, Limitation Act.

[8] It cannot, therefore, be said that this case is direct authority either one way or the other that an application for copy of the decree must be made within the period of limitation if the appellant is to be entitled to the advantage of any time taken by the Court in the preparation of the copy of the decree. But this case is authority for the statement emphasised in the case decided by the Patna Full Bench that the time taken in doing things beyond the control of the appellant for which he is in no way responsible, cannot run against him or work to his disadvantage.

[9] The Rangoon case in 55 I. A. 161,[9] was referred to by the Full Bench of the Patna High Court and indeed by other High Courts in dealing with this question. In that case the point really in issue was, whether the time taken in obtaining a copy of the decree when the rules did not require such a copy to be attached to the memorandum of appeal could be "time requisite" within the meaning of S. 12, Limitation Act, and so time to be excluded in favour of the appellant in computing the date when limitation expired. But, again, there is nothing in that case directly bearing on the decision of the question as to whether time can run in favour of the appellant, if he has made no application for a copy of the decree after the period of limitation has expired, but it would not, in my view, be a matter of importance, whether an application for copies was made within or after the 90 days if it was made even a day before the decree was signed; for, in the result there will be no difference in the date when the period of limitation expired and on which or before which the appeal is to be filed, which is one of the two crucial dates. The other crucial date is the date of the decree or judgment. As in this case, if it be as has been alleged, that an application, now lost, was made for copies, soon after judgment was pronounced in Court on 4th April, even before the judgment was signed on 6th May, then the appellant would be entitled to the benefit of the time which elapsed before the copies were ready for him to take away, that is to say, 6th September, and he would be entitled only to time up to 6th September, if he applied on the very day on which the decree was signed, or on the day before, but if he delayed thereafter, then time would begin to run against him and if he delayed till the expiry of 90 days, his appeal must be out of time; and if he delays at all in applying after the decree is signed, then so long as he delays so long does time run against him and must be deducted from the 90 days which he is allowed over and above the time taken in the preparation and signing of the decree, in which, in mofussil Courts he can have no part and for which he can have no responsibility.

[10] The two judgments of the Privy Council then in their general interpretation of the material words in S. 12 (2), Limitation Act do, in my view, support the case that it is not necessary for the appellant to apply for a copy of the decree before the period of limitation has expired in order to secure the benefit of the time required for the preparation of the decree, which is beyond his control and of which he must supply a copy. In the case before us, whether we take it that application was made for a copy soon after the judgment was given on 4th April or two days before the decree was signed on 8th August, the application was made before the decree was signed: there is no difficulty in estimating the time which is to be excluded from the period of limitation or rather to be added to the period of limitation, which in this case, is from the date of the judgment to the date on which the decree was signed, that is, from 4th April to 8th August.

[11] We heard arguments on the question of fact, as to whether an application for the copies was made after the judgment was signed and before at least 6th May, when the application for stay was made in which it is stated that an application for copies had been made already. In my view of the case the decision of the question of fact is not necessary, though I should hold on the facts that an application was made; for, there could be no doubt that the statement in the application of 6th May, asking for stay, that copies had been applied for, must have been made either because what it stated was true, or in the bona fide belief that it was true, and I think myself the bona fide belief that this was true could only be based upon an act so recent that its correct recollection should properly be presumed. The application of 6th May, which stated that copies had already been applied for, could easily have been turned into an application for copies also by the addition of the appropriate request, and this would have been done if it had not been believed, in good faith, that this application for copies was unnecessary, for it had already been made. I think, the undoubted existence of this genuine belief would justify the presumption that the belief was well-founded and this application for copies was made before 6th May. On that ground also this appeal would be in time.

[12] My view, therefore, is that this appeal is not time-barred, and should be put down for hearing in the usual way.

Emperor v. Muhammad Hussain and another — Accused.

Criminal Ref. No. 264 of 1946, Decided on 10-1-1947, made by Dist. Magistrate, Sukkur.

Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 342 — Applicability to summary proceedings.

That proceedings are summary proceedings is no reason why an accused should not be properly examined in accordance with S. 342. [Para 3]

Two Excise subordinates were prosecuted for an offence under S. 122, Railways Act. The Magistrate in a summary proceeding convicted both the accused on the strength of the entry in column 7 of the Register of Cases in respect of both of them which was as follows: "Admits unlawful entry on the platform. Pleads guilty."

Held that the Magistrate had not properly examined the accused persons under S. 342. It was probable in the extreme that the two accused in effect merely admitted that they had not the usual platform passes nor the identification cards and that this admission was construed wrongly as an admission of unlawful entry and as a plea of guilty. The conviction was therefore set aside. [Para 4]

Advocate-General—for the Crown.

Davis C. J. — This is a reference by the District Magistrate, Sukkur, who endorses a complaint made by the Deputy Commissioner, Salt and Excise for Sind, against a Railway Magistrate who in summary proceedings convicted two Excise subordinates upon their own plea of guilty of unlawful entry upon a railway platform, an offence punishable under S. 122, Railways Act, and sentenced each to pay a fine of Rs. 50.

[2] The Deputy Commissioner in his letter to the District Magistrate states that in the ordinary course Excise subordinates are given platform passes by Railway authorities; such platform passes ordinarily hold good for a period of six months. But on 17-6-1946, the Divisional Superintendent of the North Western Railway at Karachi informed him that in future platform permits would not be given; that the Excise Department should issue identification cards to their own subordinates and these identification cards will be accepted by the Railway authorities in place of the platform passes, and the Divisional Superintendent asked the Deputy Commissioner to return the platform passes issued to the Excise staff. This apparently the Deputy Commissioner did, but identification cards were not apparently properly printed or supplied to the Excise subordinates who, on the instructions of the Deputy Commissioner were told to rely on their buckle number, which would obtain for them the necessary entry to the Railway station for the purpose of carrying out their duties of search, etc. Thus it came about that on 29-6-1946, without passes and without identification cards, two Excise subordinates entered a railway carriage and searched or attempted to search a passenger. The railway authorities apparently took objection and in fairness to them it should be stated that all Station Masters were by a letter dated 29-5-1946, informed by the Divisional Commercial Officer, North Western Railway, that platform permits for Excise subordinates had been withdrawn and that identification cards were in future to be considered a sufficient authority for Excise subordinates to enter upon railway platforms.

[3] It may be said then that the railway authorities were not acting outside their obvious duty. The Excise subordinates had neither platform passes, nor identification cards and their entry apparently was in consequence of what the Deputy Commissioner of Salt and Excise thought to be a reasonable temporary arrangement made by him without, apparently, consulting the Railway authorities, and without obtaining their consent; and had we been satisfied that the Railway Magistrate who was dealing with this matter in a summary way, had made a sufficient inquiry, we should not have interfered, but we cannot, in the circumstances, believe that the entries in column 7 of the Register of Cases correctly represent what happened in this case, or give an indication that the Magistrate has properly examined the accused persons under S. 342, Criminal P. C., and we have held, more than once, in this Court, that the mere fact that the proceedings are summary proceedings is no reason why an accused should not be properly examined in accordance with the provisions of S. 342, Criminal P. C. The entries in column 7 are : "Admits unlawful entry on the platform. Pleads gulity." This entry is in reference to accused Muhammad Hassan Yar Muhammad Bhutto. The second entry is the same "Admits unlawful entry on the platform. Pleads guilty," and has reference to accused Ferozdin Nazar Muhammad.

[4] We think in effect that it is probable in the extreme, these two Excise Constables merely admitted that they had not the usual platform passes, nor the identification cards, and that this admission was construed wrongly as an admission of unlawful entry and as a plea of guilty; and we think, therefore, on that account these proceedings should be set aside and these two accused persons should be tried again upon the same charge, but the Magistrate should consider any relevant evidence that may be brought before him to show that though the Excise subordinates had neither platform passes nor identification cards, in view of the fact that the passes in the ordinary way would have held good until 30-6-1946, their entry on 29-6-1946, was with the implied consent of the Railway authorities and therefore was not an unlawful entry; and the Magistrate should take care to see that the substance of the accused's statements if they make any should be entered in column 7 and the Magistrate should in examining the accused follow the provisions of S. 342, Criminal P. C.

[5] We would, however, point out that we do not think the Deputy Commissioner has followed a proper course in writing to the District Magistrate. What the Deputy Commissioner should have done, we think, was to see that his subordinates were given proper legal assistance, and that a proper application in revision was made to this Court in the ordinary way, supported by affidavits; for, the Deputy Commissioner of Salt and Excise is in no privileged position, so that he can approach this Court through the District Magistrate when an ordinary private person would be unable to do so; and the fact that he appears to think that he and his subordinates occupy a privileged position, may explain some of the trouble that has arisen in this case.

[6] We therefore set aside the conviction of the two Excise constables Muhammad Hassan and Ferozdin and send the case back to the District Magistrate of Sukkur for him to send it to a competent Magistrate for retrial. Order accordingly.

Criminal Revn. No. 243 of 1946, Decided on 10-1-1947, against order of Dist. Magistrate, Dadu, D/-8-8-1946.

Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 421 — Admission of appeal—Effect.

Once an appeal is admitted to a full hearing the Court should not dismiss it summarily but should pass a reasoned order thereon. [Para 2]

A. K. Brohi —for Applicants.

Advocate-General—for the Crown.

Davis C. J.—This is an application in revision made on behalf of two accused persons against an order of the District Magistrate of Dadu, which is as follows :

"Appeal is summarily rejected. The accused are directed to appear before the S. D. M. Dadu to give sureties on 15th August 1946."

[2] We cannot in these proceedings go into the merits of the order by which the accused were bound over or the order under which their sureties were rejected; but we infer from the order passed by the District Magistrate of Dadu that he had admitted the appeal of the accused for full hearing and that being so, the summary rejection of the appeal is misconceived. Once the appeal, as it would appear, was admitted to a formal hearing, the learned District Magistrate should have given a reasoned order upon it and should not have dismissed it summarily. We infer that the appeal was admitted to full hearing owing to the fact that the District Magistrate had suspended the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate for the time being and the record shows he heard Mr. Najmuddin on behalf of the Crown and the applicants on behalf of the accused.

[3] The order of the learned District Magistrate is therefore set aside and the case is returned to him for the purpose of hearing the parties and passing a reasoned order thereon. Order accordingly.

First Appeal No. 20 of 1944, Decided on 30th October 1946, from decision of First Class Sub-Judge, Sukkur, D/- 23rd December 1943.

Civil P. C. (1908), O. 21, R. 58—Scope of—Order to attach property in execution — Court cannot decide that property belongs to third person on objection of judgment-debtor—If property is attached third party can raise objection under O. 21, R. 58.

Order 21, R. 58, Civil P. C., provides a special procedure for dealing with the claims of third parties in relation to property attached in execution of a decree : 28 A. I. R. 1941 Cal. 357, Rel. on. [Para 3]

Where the Court has before it an application to execute a decree by attachment of property, it is concerned with the property in the hands of the judgment-debtors; it is concerned with judgment-debtors ; it is not concerned with third parties; and if it should appear thereafter that the property attached was in the possession of a third party, then it is for the third party to raise his claim and ask for an adjudication; but it is not for the Court to adjudicate upon the claim of a third party on the objection of a judgment-debtor. An order passed in such a case that the property belonged to a third party and not to the judgment-debtor is wrong as being premature. [Para 3]

Judgment. — This is an appeal against an order of the First Class Subordinate Judge of Sukkur, dismissing an execution application with costs, primarily on the ground that the property sought to be attached was the property of a third party. The decree to be executed was one obtained by Messrs. William Jacks and Company and assigned to one Bhagwandas for execution against one Gulomal since deceased; in execution the assignee of the decree sought to attach and sell certain immovable property shown in the list attached to the execution application. The widow of the deceased Gulomal Smt. Heejulbai appears to have been the chief contestant, for Motiomal the son of Gulomal raised no objection to the execution. Indeed, it was argued that he as a close relation of Bhagwandas acted in collusion with him.

[2] It was contended on behalf of the widow Smt. Heejulbai that so far as she was concerned, at least, the decree could not be executed, because she was not shown as one of the legal representatives of Gulomal in the decree when it was transferred from the Court of the Judicial Commissioner to the District Court, Sukkur, and from the District Court to the Subordinate Court, Sukkur, for execution, and that it was not therefore open to the decree-holder to seek execution of the decree against one who had not been properly joined as the legal representative.

[3] The second point taken on behalf of Smt. Heejulbai and which, in fact, was a substantial point if it had been taken at the right time and in right manner, was that the property sought to be attached was not the property of the judgment debtor; it was the property of one Parumal son of Panjumal; and indeed the argument of the learned advocate who appeared for the decree-holder whose execution application had been dismissed, was that the learned Judge was not justified at this stage of the proceedings in inquiring into the question of the rights of a third party. It was not for the judgment-debtor to raise the rights of a third party; it was for the third party himself under O. 21, R. 58, Civil P. C., to raise objection, as he was entitled to raise objection, when an attempt was made to attach property which was in his hands. The learned advocate referred me to a case reported in 45 C. W. N. 323[1] in support of his argument that O. 21, R. 58, Civil P. C., provided a special procedure for dealing with the claims of third parties in relation to property attached in execution of a decree and I think, myself, that in this he is right. The learned Judge had before him an application to execute a decree by attachment of property; he was concerned with the property in the hands of the judgment-debtors; he was concerned with judgment-debtors; he was not concerned with third parties; and if it should appear thereafter that the property attached was in the possession of a third party, then it was for the third party to raise his claim and ask for an adjudication, but it is not for the learned Judge to adjudicate upon the claim of a third party on the objection of a judgment-debtor. I think myself, therefore, that the order of the learned Judge was wrong when he decided this property was the property of Parumal Panjumal, wrong, I mean, in this sense, that it was premature; for, I do not say that the learned Judge was wrong in his appreciation of evidence or that in the proper inquiry on an objection properly raised by Parumal Panjumal himself the learned Judge's conclusion would not have been the right one. All I say is, at this stage of the proceedings, it was, I think, wrong for him to come to any conclusion at all upon this point or to hold an inquiry or adjudication into it. This brings me then to the other objection raised on behalf of Smt. Heejulbai the widow that so far as she is concerned, the decree is not susceptible of execution and if it is not susceptible of execution against her, it is not susceptible of execution against her either by way of attachment of property or otherwise. The learned advocate for the appellant admits that Smt. Heejulbai named as the widow is not the legal representative even by virtue of the new legislation which confers upon the Hindu widows certain rights and he does not press before me the case that the executing Court is entitled to join for the first time in execution of a decree transferred to it, legal representatives not joined by the Court which passed the decree and indeed the learned advocate does not, it appears to me, wish to press the case against Smt. Heejulbai at all, and I think, so far as she is concerned, the execution application should be dismissed.

[4] But so far as Matiomal is concerned, so far as the property of the judgment-debtor which is sought to be attached is in his hands, the execution application should, I think, be allowed to proceed. It is true that the position taken by Matiomal in these proceedings is invidious. He supports the execution application; he states in his written statement that he has no objection if the property is attached and sold in execution of the decree; but he is careful not to say that any such property is in his possession. If any such property is in his possession, it can of course be attached and sold in execution of the decree against him as legal representative properly joined of his father Gulomal the judgment-debtor; and I myself would infer from the fact that there is apparently a deliberate abstention in the written statement from any statement that the attached property is in the possession of Matiomal, that no such property is in his possession at all. If that is so, the order directing the decree to be executed against him or rather against property in his possession, is worthless; it is my surmise that this will prove to be the case. But nevertheless, the assignee, the decree-holder, the applicant in execution, is entitled to an order that the decree should be executed against Matiomal by the attachment and sale of the property shown in the list attached to the execution application which is in his possession. But I would, at the same time, make it clear that any such order would not cover property in possession of a third party; if, for instance, the property sought to be attached is in the possession of Parumal Panjumal. But it would be for Parumal Panjumal to raise his claim and ask for an adjudication under O. 21, R. 58, Civil P. C.

[5] It has been pointed out to me that the applicant in his execution application has said that he gives up defendant 2 for ever; that he has no property and that whatever he has is mortgaged, and it was argued that if a decree-holder seeks to execute a decree against two persons, one of whom is not a legal representative, and the other one against whom he abandons his claim, there is no one against whom the decree can be executed and therefore no property under it which is susceptible of attachment or sale. But though I think, the execution application, so far as Matiomal is concerned, is ambiguous and probably purposely so, nevertheless, I do not think it can necessarily be said that the assignee, the decree-holder, has given up his claim against Mational as the legal representative of Gulomal, and I think, there should be an order that the decree should be executed by attachment and sale of the property shown in the list attached to the execution application, so far as such property is in the possession or control of Matiomal; and if, as is argued, there is no property in the possession of Matiomal at all, then this order will be worth little more than the paper on which it is written. But it is an order to which upon the facts, as they would at this stage appear, and in accordance with the law as I have interpreted it, the appellant, the assignee of the decree-holder, is entitled. Heejulbai should not have been joined in these proceedings; therefore she is entitled to her costs against the decree-holder and against her the execution application is dismissed.

[6] In view of the ambiguous conduct of the decree-holder in relation to Matiomal, I do not think he should have any costs at all. The order of the learned Judge is modified, as I have explained, and the appeal is to that extent allowed. The order as to costs is as I have set out.

In cases of loss or damage to goods entrusted to a railway company for carriage, it may be for the company to lay the materials before the Court, but it remains for the plaintiff suing for such loss or damage to satisfy the Court that the true inference from those materials is that the servants of the company have not shown due care, skill and nerve : 4 A. I. R. 1917 P. C. 173, Foll. [Para 28]

Where, in a suit for compensation for non-delivery of a bale delivered to a railway company for consignment to the plaintiff the evidence of the defendant showed nothing more than that the missing bale was one of the bales loaded into a sealed and rivetted wagon and that in consequence of the tapes of one of the seals having been seen to have been cut, by the Train Clerk, a check was made by the Goods Clerk and these bales, including the bale in question, were found to be missing :

Held that the defendant failed to place before the Court all the necessary facts exclusively within the knowledge of the railway as to how the bale was dealt with and the true inference from what material there was on the record was that the servants of the railway had not shown due care with regard to the consignment in suit. Atmaram Harchandrai — for Plaintiffs.
Choithram Dewandas — for Defendant.

Judgment. — The plaintiffs, the National Swadeshi Stores, described as a joint Hindu family firm, carrying on business at Karachi have sued the Governor-General in Council claiming a sum of Rs. 655-8-0 as damages for the failure of the North Western Railway to deliver a bale of piecegoods consigned for carriage to the plaintiffs.

[2] The plaintiffs' case, as set out in the plaint, is that on 30-1-1943 a firm known as the Grover Calico Printing Mills delivered the bale in question to the North Western Railway at Amritsar for consignment to the plaintiffs at Karachi, under a Railway Receipt; that in the ordinary course of transit the consignment should have reached Karachi on or about 17-2-1943; that plaintiffs discovered that the bale did not arrive at Karachi and carried on correspondence with the Railway Authorities who informed them that enquiries were being made. The Railway Authorities, however, failed to deliver the bale, and the plaintiffs served them with statutory notice under S. 80 and S. 77, Railways Act. The sum of Rs. 655-8-0 is said to be the cost of the missing bale, and the plaintiffs claim this amount together with the costs of the suit and interest.

[3] The principal plea taken by the defendant in the written statement is that the suit is time barred. It is said that the cause of action arose early in February 1943 when the bale was lost. Apart from this plea the plaintiffs were put to proof of the facts stated in the plaint, it being denied that they were a joint family firm; that the cause of action arose at Karachi; that the bale was consigned by the Grover Calico Mills to the plaintiffs; that they were entitled to delivery of the bale without surrendering the Railway Receipt, and that the price of the consignment was Rs. 655-8-0 as claimed.

[4] The following issues were framed.

1. Are the plaintiffs a joint Hindu family firm?
2. Has the Court jurisdiction?
3. Is the suit barred by limitation?
4. Was the bale in question consigned by Messrs. Grover Calico Printing Mills to the plaintiffs and were the latter entitled to obtain delivery thereof?
5. Are the plaintiffs debarred from obtaining delivery of the bale and getting its value without surrendering the Railway Receipt?

6. Did the plaintiffs offer to surrender the R. R. at the time delivery was asked for ?

7. Are defendants liable for the loss of the bale in question ?

8. To what amount, if any, are the plaintiffs entitled ?

9. Is notice under S. 80. Civil P. C. proper ?

10. General.

[5] My findings on these issues are as follows: Issue 1. Yes. Issue 2. Yes. Issue 3. No. Issue 4. Yes. Issue 5. No. Issue 6. Yes. Issue 7. Yes. Issue 8. Rupees 655-8-0 together with costs of the suit and interest from date of suit till payment. Issue 9. Yes. Issues 1, 2, 4, 5, 6 and 9 were dropped on behalf of defendant, and it is, therefore, not necessary to go into these issues in detail. With regard to Issue 1, the evidence of the plaintiffs' witness, Dipchand Chandumal, establishes that the plaintiffs are a joint Hindu family firm. With regard to Issue 2, the contract of carriage involved delivery of the consignment at Karachi, the contract or part of it, was to be performed at Karachi, and this Court, therefore, clearly has jurisdiction. With regard to Issue 4, the evidence of Dipchand Chandumal and Narsinghlal, a clerk in the Central Bank of India Ltd., establishes that the documents of title covering the consignment, that is to say, the invoice Ex. 6, the Railway Receipt and relative draft, were despatched to the Central Bank of India Ltd., Karachi, for collection and that the plaintiffs were given the Railway Receipt on payment of the bill in full. The amount actually paid by the plaintiffs was Rs. 655-8-0, the amount of the bill being Rupees 653-0-6, and the balance being commission and bank charges. The original invoice, Ex. 6, shows the consignor as the Grower Calico Printing Mills. It is, as I have said, not now disputed that the Grover Calico Mills were the consignors. The Railway Receipt, which is in the possession of the defendant, was produced in Court, but not filed by the defendant. It is also not disputed that the goods were consigned to the plaintiffs, and that they were entitled on production of the Railway Receipt to delivery of the bale. The plaintiffs had pleaded in the plaint that they had lost the Railway Receipt; but this is obviously an error, because, in the course of the proceedings, it was discovered that the Railway Receipt was in the possession of the Railway, and Mr. Choithram who appeared for the defendant, produced it. Apparently what happened was that the plaintiffs at the request of the Railway authorities relinquished the Railway Receipt.

[6] The main point in the case is that covered by Issue 3 as to whether the suit is barred by limitation.

[7] It is Mr. Atmaram's contention on behalf of the plaintiffs that this is a simple claim for compensation against a carrier for non-delivery of goods, falling under Art. 31 of Sch. 1, Limitation Act, which requires the suit to be filed within one year from the date when the goods ought to be delivered. In the plaint it was pleaded that the goods should have been delivered on 17th February 1943, but the evidence of one of the defendant's own witness, Tejumal, Ex. 25, a clerk in the office of the Divisional Superintendent of the North Western Railway, Karachi, establishes beyond doubt that 4th March 1943 is the date when the bale ought to have been delivered. This witness has produced the delivery book establishing that other consignments sent from Amritsar in the same wagon with the consignment in question reached Karachi on 4th March 1943.

[8] Mr. Choithram, on behalf of the defendant, concedes that if Art. 31 applies to this case, the suit is in time, but it is his contention that Art. 30 applies.

[9] Article 30 requires that a suit against a carrier for compensation for losing or injuring goods must be brought within one year from the date when the loss or injury occurred.

[10] By the evidence of three witnesses it has been attempted to be established on behalf of the defendant that the consignment must have been stolen from the train. This evidence will be dealt with in more detail hereafter, when considering Issue 7. At this stage it is sufficient to say that it is relied upon to prove that the bale in question together with a number of others was placed in a wagon at Amritsar on 30th January 1943 and the wagon duly sealed "for Samasatta" it being in contemplation of the Railway that it would be opened and the contents checked and distributed into other wagons at Samasatta; but on 4th February 1943 when it arrived at Montgomery, one of the stations before Samasatta, the tapes of the seal on one side were found to have been tampered with. The wagon was, therefore, opened and the contents checked and three bales including the bale in question were found to be missing.

[11] It was Mr. Choithram's contention that the "losing" of goods within the contemplation of Art. 30 includes theft of goods, and that the missing bale must be deemed to have been lost on or before 4th February 1943, and that therefore, under Art. 30 the suit is barred. It is conceded that if Art. 30 applies and the bale was lost on or before 4th February 1943, the suit would be time barred.

[12] In developing his argument Mr. Choithram emphasised what is indeed obvious from the terms of Art. 30 that the loss contemplated is loss by the Railway Company and not loss to the owner. The words "against the carrier for compensation for losing or injuring goods" are clear, and it is unnecessary to refer to the cases cited by Mr. Choithram in which the word "loss" in ss. 72 and 77, Railways Act, has been interpreted as meaning loss of the goods by the Railway Company while in transit.

[13] Mr. Choithram then went on to say that the 'losing' of the goods by the carrier within the contemplation of Art. 30 included all cases where the goods had been stolen. In the ordinary sense the losing of an article by a person is generally accepted as meaning something in the nature of a mislaying of that article by that person; of a dealing with it by that person in some way so that it cannot be found. When for instance a man accidentally drops an article and departs in ignorance of the fact, he loses it temporarily or irretrievably, but when he places an article in a safe and the safe is broken open by a thief and the article stolen there has not in the ordinary sense been a 'losing' of that article by that man although in the wider sense he has suffered the loss of it. If as, I hold to be the case, the 'losing' of goods within the meaning of Art. 30 means a losing of the goods by the Railway Company then it might be argued with some justification that a theft of goods from a carrier is not a losing of them by the carrier. It might be said that Art. 30 interpreted in a plain and natural sense is confined only to those cases where the goods leave the custody of the carrier by a losing or mislaying of them by the carrier or his servants and would include neither theft nor misdelivery. This restricted interpretation might however involve the result that the "injuring" of goods within Art. 30 must be by the servants of the carrier or his servants, and not by outside agency. On the other hand it may be argued in support of the broader interpretation that when the carrier has suffered (whether by theft, misdelivery or other cause) goods to be lost to the owner, he may, for the purposes of this Article, be said to have lost them himself.

[14] Article 30 is in many respects very unsatisfactory, and I do not propose to embark upon a detailed discussion as to its scope or express any final opinion as to whether the word 'losing' includes a case of theft in transit. I will assume for the purpose of this case that it does.

[15] The crux of Mr. Choithram's argument is that Arts. 30 and 31 are mutually exclusive, and that Art. 30 covers all cases of loss, deterioration and damage to the goods, that is to say, all cases in which the goods are wholly or in part no longer in a deliverable state, whereas Art. 31 contemplates only those cases where the carrier deliberately withholds delivery.

[16] The argument is mainly based on the words in Art. 31 "when the goods ought to be delivered," it being Mr. Choithram's submission that these words contemplate possession by the carrier of goods in a deliverable state and cannot include goods which have been lost or destroyed; and Mr. Choithram relies on 69 I. C. 103,[1] in which Jwala Prasad J. said:

"There is again a cardinal difference between the 'non-delivery' and the 'loss, destruction or deterioration' of goods while in charge of a carrier, such as, the Railway Company. In the former there is a deliberate withholding of the property from the person entitled to its delivery and in the latter the loss, destruction or deterioration takes place on account of certain extraneous causes. In the latter case, there is no deliberate withholding of the property though there may be a wilful neglect in not taking proper care of the goods."

[17] I cannot see how this view is justified by the plain terms of Art. 31 which makes no reference to a deliberate withholding. Article 31 appears to me to apply to any suit against a carrier for compensation for non-delivery or delay in delivering goods, irrespective of the cause of the non-delivery. Indeed, if the article were to be interpreted as excluding all cases in which goods had been lost, destroyed or misdelivered, its applicability would be so narrowly restricted as to render its inclusion in the Limitation Act virtually unnecessary. It is difficult to conceive of a case in which a deliberate withholding by a carrier was provable. No carrier in ordinary circumstances would admit a deliberate withholding.

[18] I consider that the correct view is that Arts. 30 and 31 overlap, and that, in any case in which the carrier has failed to fulfil his obligation under the terms of the contract to deliver the goods, the party aggrieved is entitled to sue for non-delivery, and that such a case comes within Art. 31.

[19] I am fortified in this view by certain observations of Richardson J. in A. I. R. 1923 Cal. 397,[2] in which it was argued that goods not delivered or short delivered are not lost, reliance being placed for this proposition on the judgment of Jwala Prasad J. referred to above. Richardson J. rejecting the argument said:

"I will assume that the word 'loss' in this section means loss by the Railway Administration. The argument is that goods not delivered or short delivered are not 'lost' and reliance was placed on the judgment of Jwala Prasad J. in A. I. R. 1922 Pat. 106.[1] The learned Judge referred to the distinction which appears in Arts. 30 and 31 of the Schedule of the Limitation Act between claims against a carrier on the one hand for compensation for losing or injuring goods and on the other for compensation for non-delivery of or delay in delivering goods. In the first case limitation runs from the time when the loss or injury occurs and in the second case from the time when the goods ought to be delivered. In my opinion with respect these two Articles of the Limitation Act throw little, if any, light on the construction of S. 77, Railways Act. There may be rea- sons for the presence of both Articles in the Limitation Act but they may still be overlapping. Where there is an agreement by a carrier to deliver goods at a fixed time or within a reasonable time, a claim for goods lost may be drawn as a claim for their non-delivery.

The reasoning of the learned Judge then proceeds on the assumption—mistaken as I venture to think — that a claim for non-delivery necessarily imports that the Railway Company are consciously and deliberately withholding goods in their possession, which they might deliver if they chose to do so.

As it seems to me, a claim for non-delivery without more, merely asserts that the goods were not delivered at the agreed time or within a reasonable time. Such a claim asserts nothing as to the cause of the non-delivery."

[20] I would also refer to certain observations of Fawcett, A. J. C. in 51 I. C. 570.[3] Dealing with an argument advanced on behalf of the plaintiffs that non-delivery in Art. 31 did not include mis-delivery, Fawcett, A. J. C. said :

"The only question, therefore, is whether this is a suit against a carrier for compensation for non delivery of goods, so as to fall under Art. 31. On this point Mr. Elphinston has cited a ruling of the Punjab Chief Court in 19 I. C. 477,[4] where Rattigan J. held that the word 'non-delivery' in this Article does not include mis-delivery, and that the case of mis-delivery falls within the purview of Art. 115 of the Act. With due deference I do not think that the grounds given are fully sufficient for holding that the Legislature did not intend to include such a case as the the present one under the word non-delivery. Mr. Lobo has pointed out that, whatever be the manner in which the carrier may have dealt with the goods, whether he may have mis-appropriated them or delivered them to some one else, the complaint of the plaintiffs in both cases is one that they have suffered injury through the non-delivery to them of the goods. And in this plaint, as I have already pointed out, the cause of action is specifically alleged to be a failure or neglect to deliver. What gives plaintiff this cause of action is that the defendants have not performed their contract with him, not that they have performed their contract improperly so as to make it a case of misperformance instead of one of non-performance. The fact that the defendants allege that delivery was given to a third party which the plaintiffs say was a mis-delivery, is, it seems to me, immaterial in considering whether the description of the suit is or is not one in which plaintiffs seek compensation for non-delivery of the goods. In this case I think there can be no doubt whatever that it is such a suit, and that the case, therefore, falls under Art. 31, Limitation Act."

[21] For the purposes of Mr. Choitbram's contention there is no difference in principle between a case of mis-delivery and a case of theft. Fawcett A. J. C.'s observations are directly applicable to the present case.

[22] I would also point out that the judgment of Jwala Prasad J. has been dissented from in a series of subsequent cases. These are all referred to in the judgment of Mullick, A. C. J. in 5 Pat. 106.[5]

[23] The plaintiffs' cause of action in the present case was that the defendant had not performed his contract to deliver the goods. It was a simple case of non-delivery such as contemplated by Art. 31. The cause of action was not based on loss or destruction of the goods by the Railway, and I cannot see how subsequent proof by the Railway that there was a loss is calculated to take the case out of the plain terms of Art. 31 by which it is clearly governed.

[24] I do not see how a carrier is entitled to set up a loss (which I am assuming includes theft), whether or not such loss amounts to a tort to the goods, to bring a suit within the shorter period contemplated by Art. 30 when it clearly falls within Art. 31.

[25] Incidentally, in this particular case, the correspondence indicates that the consignees could not obtain reasonable information from the Railway as to the fate of the consignment. The correspondence is Ex. 7/1 to Ex. 7/9, and indicates that the consignees took up the matter with the Railway early in 1943 and in spite of continual reminders they were still kept in virtual ignorance of what is alleged to have occurred to the bale upto 16-2-1944; the Railway having merely in the meanwhile intimated in October 1943 that the matter was under reference with the police. No details of any kind were given. In the written statement the defendant has merely stated that the bale was 'lost' but again gives no information as to how, where or when it was lost. It is obvious, as Mr. Atmaram points out, that it is quite impossible in such circumstances for a consignee to base a suit upon a losing of the goods by the Railway Company. I have incidentally expressed the view in other cases that correspondence of this nature does not operate to extend time under Art. 30 which clearly lays down the starting point of limitation as the date when the loss or injury occurs, subject of course to the correspondence embodying acknowledgment of liability within the meaning of S. 19, Limitation Act. We are not here dealing with a case falling within Art. 30 but nevertheless I would mention that another unsatisfactory aspect of the operation of Art. 30 is that a plaintiff is required in a case falling within that Article to bring his suit within a year from the date of his loss or destruction of the goods, when in a great many cases he is unable to obtain from the carrier, within the period of limitation, any information as to the date and circumstances of the loss or destruction. In many cases the precise date might not be known to the carrier himself. This seems to me an additional ground for saying that Arts. 30 and 31 are (not?) mutually exclusive.

[26] Issue 7. Section 72, Railways Act, provides that in the absence of any special contract, the liability of a Railway Administration for the loss, destruction or deterioration of goods delivered to it for carriage, is that of a bailee under Ss. 151, 152 and 161, Contract Act. There was no special contract in this case limitating the responsibility of the Railway and the point for consideration under this issue is therefore as to whether the Railway took such care of the bale in question as a man of ordinary prudence would under similar circumstances take of his own goods of the same bulk, quality and value.

[27] The burden of proof in such a case is discussed in Mulla's Indian Contract Act, Edn. 7, at p. 495 as follows:

"In cases governed by the provisions of Ss. 151 and 152, the loss or damage of goods entrusted to a bailee is prima facie evidence of negligence, and the burden of proof, therefore, to disprove negligence lies on the bailee. The same rule applies, by reason of S. 72, Railways Act, to a railway administration, unless the goods are consigned under a risk note under which the railway company are absolved from all liability for loss or damage except that due to wilful negligence on the part of their servants, in which case the burden lies in the first instance upon the company to prove that the loss was such as was contemplated by the contract, and when this has been done it shifts upon the plaintiff to show that the loss was due to the wilful neglect of the company or its servants."

[28] This passage is based on numerous Indian decisions to which specific reference is unnecessary. The learned commentator proceeds to point out that there are special cases where goods are destroyed by fire arising from some unknown cause, and in the paragraph dealing with these he has referred to the following passage of the judgment of the Privy Council in 20 Bom. L. R. 735.[6]

"The weight to be attached to the judgment of the learned Judge of first instance, who saw the witnesses, is a good deal lessened by reason of his having apparently thrown the burden of proof on the wrong party. He states that it was, in his opinion, incumbent upon the defendant company to satisfy him that they had taken such care of these goods as a man of ordinary prudence would take of his own goods. This, in their Lordships' view, is not a correct statement of the law. It is true that under the law of Evidence Act of 1872, S. 106, 'when any fact is especially within the knowledge of any person, the burden of proving that fact is on him' and it was therefore right that the defendant company should call the material witnesses who were on the spot, as it seems to have done. But this provision of the law of evidence does not discharge the plaintiff from proving the want of due diligence, or (expressing it otherwise) the negligence of the servants of the defendant company. It may be for the company to lay the materials before the Court, but it remains for the plaintiffs to satisfy the Court that the true inference from those materials is that the servants of the defendant company have not shown due care, skill and nerve."

[29] Although the learned commentator has made no comment to this effect, there does seem some divergence between the expressions used as to the burden of proof in some of the Indian decisions and in the passage from the Privy Council judgment set out above. It is true that the case before the Privy Council was one in which damages were claimed for loss by fire, but nevertheless certain general principles have been laid down as to the burden of proof in cases of loss of or damage to goods entrusted to a bailee, and I proceed on the basis laid down by the Privy Council.

[30] Section 106, Evidence Act, reads as follows:

"When any fact is especially within the knowledge of any person, the burden of proving that fact is upon him."

[31] In this case all the facts regarding how the consignment was dealt with from the time it was handed over to the Railway up to the time of discovery of the alleged loss are especially within the knowledge of the Railway, and the plaintiff is not in a position to have any knowledge whatever of these facts.

[32] Three witnesses were examined on behalf of the defendant to show how the consignment was dealt with while in the custody of the Railway and it is for the plaintiffs to satisfy me that the true inference from these facts is that the Railway did not exercise the care and skill required of a bailee.

[33] The first of these witnesses was Gianchand Nibalchand, Ex. 12, a Goods Clerk at the North Western Railway Station, Amritsar. His evidence is directed to show that on 30th January 1943 the bale in question consigned to Karachi under R. R. No. 583433 was loaded under his supervision into a covered Railway wagon at Amritsar. The wagon was then "sealed to Samasatta" There were in all, according to the witness, 149 packages in the wagon. The witness has no particular recollection of having dealt with the consignment, and his evidence is based on a "Detail sheet," Ex. 13, which was prepared at the time and which includes an entry as to the missing bale. There was considerable discussion as to the admissibility of Ex. 13, it being established in cross-examination that Ex. 13 was a copy made in May 1944 from the original Detail Sheet. When the question was raised the witness produced the original Detail Sheet, Ex 16. There is nothing to show as has been suggested on behalf of the plaintiff, that Ex. 16 is not a genuine document, and there is no reason why the evidence of the witness should not be accepted. The only comment I have to make is that there was no attempt to explain the method adopted in sealing and rivetting the wagon.

[34] The next of the defendant's witnesses was Shivlal Hardayal, Ex. 17, a train clerk in the North Western Railway. He states that in 1943 he was stationed at Montgomery as a train clerk and that his duty involved "the taking of the numbers of the trains" which arrived. The wagon in question arrived at Montgomery on 4th February 1943 and on looking at it he discovered that on one side the tapes bearing the seal had been severed and the severed ends knotted together. The seals themselves were intact as were the rivets. His discovery was entered into a seal book which has since been lost. The wagon was then "Kutcha" or crudely sealed, and a memorandum issued to the Goods Clerk, said to be one Jiwandas, to check the contents of the wagon. Exhibit 18 is said to be that memorandum. It is said Jiwandas, the Goods Clerk subsequently made a check and found 3 bales of piecegoods missing out of the total of 149 in the wagon. The witness was himself not present at the check. Jiwandas is then said to have issued a memorandum, Ex. 19 as follows :

"20 Go. Wagon 12826 ex—yours to Samasatta T. R. Van arrived with one side old label of wagon 35254 as ASA to LHR. Oil Van tied—checked jointly and 146 against 149 or 3 bales C. P. Goods by ASR 13305/1, 13779/1, 13778/1, KYC short."

Jiwandas who is said to have written this memorandum and whose handwriting the witness purports to identify, has not been examined as a witness, and is said no longer to be in the employ of the Railway. Jiwandas is also said to have made an entry, Ex. 20 in the "Deficiency Book" relating to his inspection. This entry reads :

"Wagon No. 12826 ex am. to Sind shunted in goods shed with one side seal ASR and other side one old label of wagon No. 35257 as ASR to LHR. Oilvan tied in jointly in presence of Prakashsingh constable No. 871 — found 146 packages against 149 or 3 bales C. P. goods. 2117 ASR 13305/1 KYC, 13779/1, 13778/1 KYC short."

[35] Objection was taken to the admissibility of Exs. 19 and 20 by Mr. Atmaram on behalf of the plaintiffs on the ground that Jiwandas who made these entries had not been examined.

[36] To this matter I will refer later. Apart from these documents the admissibility of which has been questioned, the evidence of Shivlal, so far as it relates to matters within his knowledge, is merely to the effect that in the course of his duties he observed that the tapes to which the seal (on one side of the wagon) was attached had been severed and knotted together, that in consequence of what he saw he made a report and there later followed a check of the contents of the wagon at which he was not present. The witness is extremely vague on what he actually did see. He has said that the rivets were intact, but was unable to explain how therefore the theft could have taken place. He has said in cross-examination :

"The wagons are rivetted by having a metal rod passed through metal loops on the door and the rod subsequently bent by the rivetting man. The metal rod may be roughly the thickness of a pencil. The rivet is usually on the middle of the wagon. There is no foothold on the side of the wagon. The rivet cannot be opened except by means of a hammer and short chisel. It may take five minutes to open a rivet. I cannot myself say how thieves break into a running train."

It is the contention of Mr. Choithram on behalf of the defendant that theft must have occurred while the train was in motion but the evidence of Shivlal leaves entirely unexplained how any such theft could have taken place in the present case, and why assuming the thieves did unrivet the wagon they chose to re-rivet it. Then again the evidence of the witness regarding the seal is far from clear. He says that the tapes had been severed and the severed ends retied, but he admitted in cross-examination that the tapes are normally tight or taut, and did not explain how in the circumstances they could have been retied. Nor is there any reason why they should have been retied, if there had been theft when the train was in motion. Apart from the fact that there is no suggestion that the rivets had been tampered with, it passes my comprehension how thieves could have re-rivetted the wagon in motion and why in any event they should have thought fit to re-rivet it and retie the tapes assuming such a thing were possible. Taken at its face value the evidence of this witness, to my mind, indicates nothing more than that it was in consequence of something he saw that the disappearance of the bale came to light. His evidence is of little assistance to the defendant.

[37] The third witness relied upon by the defendant in connexion with the disappearance of the bale is Ramchand Pagaram, Ex. 23. He states that in February 1943 he was stationed at Montgomery in the Watch and Ward Department of the North Western Railway; that in February 1943 Jiwandas in his presence checked the contents of a certain wagon the result of the check being entered in a book and that he signed the entry. The entry is Ex. 20, and his signature Ex. 20-A. In the course of the check 3 packages were found to be missing from the wagon. The entry Ex. 20 was made in his presence by Jiwandas and read out to him before he signed it.

[38] The witness was merely a chowkidar or watchman and his evidence was of a vague nature. It is obvious that he had no recollection of the event and that what he said was based on the entry made by Jiwandas. He said that at the time of the inspection a policeman and a railway coolie were present; that the rivet was removed with a chisel and hammer and that the original seal was intact. He cannot read or write English and he says that he knows English figures only. It is obvious to my mind that his evidence carries the case no further than whatever may be gathered from Ex. 20.

[39] Mr. Choithram on behalf of the defendant contends that Exs. 19 and 20 are relevant under S. 35, Evidence Act as being entries made in an official book.

[40] There may be some doubt as to whether the collection of telegram forms in which EX. 19 appears is an official book, but I will assume it is and accept the entry. I think the "Deficiency Book" in which EX. 20 appears must be described as an official book and I also accept the entry relied upon for what it is worth.

[41] To my mind the evidence of the defendant's three witnesses and the documents which were produced show nothing more than that the missing bale was one of the 149 bales loaded into a sealed and revitted wagon at Amritsar Station on 30-1-1943 and that on 4-2-1943, in consequence of the tapes of one of the seals having been seen to have been cut by the Train Clerk, Shivlal, a check was made by the Goods Clerk, Jiwandas (not before the Court) in the presence of police and the witness Ramchand, and three bales found to be missing, including the bale consigned to the plaintiff.

[42] In my view, the defendant has failed to place before the Court all the necessary facts, facts exclusively within the knowledge of the Railway, as to how the bale was dealt with. It is very significant that there was a failure to call as a witness the guard of the train or any one on the train at any time, or any policeman or police officer. There is nothing to show how many stations, if any, the train stopped at before Montgomery; there is nothing to show how long it remained at Amritsar or how long it was at Montgomery before anything was found wrong; there is nothing to show whether any care whatever was taken of this wagon loaded with valuable property whether when stationary or in motion. In short, nothing of its history is given between 30th January and 4-2-1943. A train "guard," as the designation would indicate, is presumably required to exercise some care and supervision over the train and the contents of it, and, as I have said, no guard has been called as a witness. Some care and supervision is also required to be exercised when a train containing valuable property is stationary, that is to say, is drawn up and stops for any appreciable time en route, and there is no information forthcoming as to whether any steps were taken to guard it.

[43] Heavy bales of piecegoods are not expected, ordinarily, to disappear when they have been placed in a properly rivetted wagon. Running train thefts are known to be frequent in India, but on the other hand it seems to me that there is a tendency by railways to attribute losses to running train thefts when in fact thefts occur at stations, sidings and yards. In this particular case, as I have already pointed out, there is nothing whatever to indicate a running train theft. The rivets were found intact and thieves would not ordinarily, unless in collusion with the railway staff take the trouble to re-rivet a wagon after a theft had been committed. The defendant has clearly omitted to call material witnesses and the plaintiff has satisfied me that the true inference from what material there is on the record is that the servants of the railway have not shown due care with regard to the consignment in suit.

[44] Issue 8. Plaintiffs have claimed Rs. 665-8-0 as compensation for the missing bale. The only argument advanced on behalf of the defendant on this issue is that the plaintiffs have not examined the consignor as to the contents of the bale. When the matter came up for hearing, several months ago, an application was made on behalf of the plaintiffs to examine the consignor on commission. This application was vehemently opposed on behalf of the defendant and was dismissed. I am of the view that the plaintiffs are entitled to compensation as claimed.

[45] Dipchand Chandumal, plaintiffs' manager, has established to my satisfaction that his firm had previous dealings with the consignors, the Grover Calico Printing Mills at Amritsar, and that this firm on 30th January consigned the bale in question to the plaintiffs at Karachi. The invoice, EX. 6, has been produced and this shows the value of the goods as Rs. 653 and gives a detailed description of them, showing them as printed poplins. This invoice together with the relative railway receipt and bill of collection has been proved by Narsinglal, a clerk in the Central Bank of India Ltd. Karachi, to have been sent by the bank's Amritsar Branch to their Karachi Branch for collection and that the amount of the bill was paid in full by the plaintiffs and the relative railway receipt handed over to them. At one stage of the case Dipchand Chandumal was asked whether he had produced his books of account in Court and he said that he had not. I recollect, however, that on an adjourned hearing he informed the defendant's advocate that he had now produced his account books but the defendant's advocate did not pursue the matter.

[46] I am satisfied from the evidence that the plaintiffs had entered into a genuine mercantile transaction with the Grover Calico Printing Mills and that the latter consigned to them a bale of piecegoods. The railway receipt shows that a bale described as a bale of piecegoods had been received by the railway for carriage. It was suggested by Mr. Choithram that the goods may not have been of the value claimed for them or alternatively that the bale may have contained mere rubbish. I am not prepared to accept such a contention on the particular facts of this case. I hold that there was a genuine mercantile transaction by concerns who had previously done business together before and that the bale must have contained goods of this value paid for. Apart from this the plaintiff paid for the bale in full and the measure of compensation for non-delivery is in this case what the plaintiff in good faith paid for the bale. I, therefore, hold that the compensation claimed by the plaintiffs is payable. I would add here that this is purely a question of facts and it does not follow that in every case similar evidence would necessarily be accepted.

[47] Issue 10. I accordingly pass a decree in favour of the plaintiffs for the sum of Rs. 655-8-0 together with the costs of the suit and interest on the claim at 6 per cent. per annum from date of suit till payment.

Suit decreed.

Order. — This is an application in revision against a judgment of the Subordinate Judge of Jacobabad, exercising Small Cause Court jurisdiction, in which purporting to exercise the powers vested in him, he upheld the contention of a third party in execution proceedings that the tonga which had been attached was not the tonga of the judgment-debtor, who was a tonga driver. The learned Judge found that the tonga was the property of one Mian Abdul Satar Shah, this Mian Abdul Satar Shah describes himself as a poor Sayed and the owner of the tonga. The learned Judge allowed the claim petition in proceedings under O. 21, R. 58, Civil P. C., thus setting aside a previous ex parte order, dismissing the claim petition and ordering execution proceedings to go on on the petition of the decree-holder who was present. The order restoring the claim petition to the file is dated 9th September 1942 and the order upholding the claim of the tonga driver passed in the absence of the decree-holder is dated 24th September 1942.

[2] The decree-holder now comes in revision to this Court alleging that the Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction to set aside his previous order, though an ex parte order, dismissing the claimant's petition for default, because under O. 21, R. 63, Civil P. C., a claimant has a right to institute a suit within one year and no necessity for exercise by a Court of its inherent jurisdiction or its jurisdiction under S. 151, Civil P. C., arises at all and that O. 9, R. 13 under which the Subordinate Judge purported to restore the claimant's petition dismissed on the ground of default, does not apply to execution proceedings.

[3] The learned advocate for the claimant took a preliminary objection that no revision lay, but I do not think there is any force in this objection. I am dealing essentially with the question of jurisdiction. The Subordinate Judge purports to exercise jurisdiction under O. 9, R. 13, Civil P. C., and against this exercise of jurisdiction it is contended that O. 9, R. 13 does not apply to the proceedings of the nature now before me, and in my view an application for revision in the matter of jurisdiction clearly does lie.

[4] Now the learned advocate for the appellant relies principally on a Full Bench judgment of the Madras High Court in A. I. R. 1931 Mad. 656,[1] where generally it was laid down that O. 9, R. 13, Civil P. C. does not apply to execution proceedings under O. 21, Civil P. C., even if such proceedings fall also within S. 47, Civil P. C., while the learned advocate for the opponent relies for the most part on the judgment of the Sind Judicial Commissioner's Court reported in 17 S. L. R. 105.[2] But it appears to me that judgment, whether the decision is right or wrong proceeds principally on the ground that it is not conceivable that there can be no remedy against an ex parte order, where the Legislature has made no provision by way of appeal or original suit to undo a wrong that has been done, but in the case of a claim which has been dismissed for default, there is a remedy by way of suit: that remedy is specifically provided by O. 21, R. 63, Civil P. C., and the fact that it is to be brought within a year does not appear to me to be material. There is a remedy open to a claimant whose petition has been dismissed by way of a suit within a proper time and so it does not appear necessary for me to deal at length with this judgment in 17 S. L. R. 105,[2] against which there now appears a considerable body of judicial authority. Generally speaking, the judgment of the Privy Council reported in 17 ALL. 106,[3] is now binding authority, though in effect O. 9, Civil P. C., does not apply to execution proceedings and Jenkins C. J. in interpreting that judgment of the Privy Council explains that in the result S. 141, Civil P. C., does not apply to proceedings in execution; and as the learned Chief Justice points out, there is no injustice in this, because R. 13 of O. 9 is not conclusive but is subject to the right of an aggrieved person to bring a suit. It is true, the learned Chief Justice was dealing with proceedings under Rr. 100 and 101 of O. 21, Civil P. C. The same argument would apply to proceedings under O. 21, R. 58, Civil P. C., whereby under R. 63 the right to bring a suit is expressly reserved.

[5] I cannot see then that there is any room for the exercise by the Subordinate Judge under S. 151, Civil P. C., of any inherent powers and it appears to me that although the learned Subordinate Judge was plainly wrong when after having dismissed the claimant's petition by way of default, and such dismissal being finally conclusive subject to the express provision to bring a suit, he did thereafter without proper notice to the decree-holder, set aside his ex parte order and finally in another ex parte order allowed the claim of the claimant that he was the owner of the tonga. I must therefore set aside the order of the learned Judge, restore his order dismissing the claim petition of the Sayed with costs and I allow the revision application with costs accordingly.

Criminal Revn. Appln. No. 268 of 1946, Decided on 3-2-1947, from order of Dist. Magistrate, Nawabshah, D/- 21-10-1946.

Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 196A—Criminal conspiracy.

The cognizance of an offence of criminal conspiracy the object of which was to file or cause to be filed a false complaint under Ss. 498 and 342, Penal Code is barred without the sanction of the Provincial Government or other authority under S. 196A. [Para 12]

Annotation : ('46-Com.) Cr. P.C. S. 196A, N. 1.

Allahbakhsh K. Brohi—for Applicant.

Fatehchand Assudomal, Advocate-General of Sind — for the Crown.

Judgment. — This is an application by Sikanderali Shah son of Ghulam Kadir Shah, a retired Mukhtiarkar and First Class Magistrate, under the provisions of Ss. 435 and 439, Criminal P. C., to quash a complaint of one Ak filed against himself and five others pending in the Court of the District Magistrate of Nawabshah for offences alleged to have been committed under S.120B read with Ss.366 and 363,Penal Code.

[2] The facts which led Ak to file a complaint are these: The applicant was a First Class Magistrate and Mukhtiarkar of Naushahro Feroz in the district of Nawabshah. On 23-4-1946, one Ismail son of Ghulam Muhamad filed a complaint against Ak son of Khamiso in the Court of the Additional District Magistrate of Nawabshah under Ss. 498 and 342, Penal Code, in which he alleged that he had been lawfully married to one Mt. Hajran for some fifteen years and had six children by her, four sons and two daughters, and that Ak had enticed her and detained her in his house at Jalbani for illicit purposes. He also complained that his wife was wrongfully confined by Ak, and asked for process against Ak under Ss. 498 and 342, Penal Code. This complaint was transferred by the learned Additional District Magistrate, Nawabshah, to the First Class Magistrate of Naushahro, the applicant Sikanderali Shah.

[3] Sikanderali Shah acting as a Magistrate issued process against Ak under S. 342, Penal Code, only and a search warrant under the provisions of S. 100, Criminal P. C., for the production of Mt. Saran daughter of Ismail and his wife Mt. Hajran. In due course, both appeared before the applicant who proceeded to record their statements. Mt. Saran stated that she apprehended danger to her life from Ak with whom her mother was on terms of intimacy and that she and her mother were in wrongful confinement, and that she was willing to go to her father Ismail. Mt. Hajran, Ismail's wife, stated that she was being wrongfully confined by Ak, with whom she had lived for a long time, and had four children from him; Saran, however, was the daughter of Ismail; she was willing to go back to Ismail. On the strength of these two statements, the applicant passed an order that Mt. Hajran and Saran were free to go wherever they liked, and allowed the request of Mt. Hajran for police protection. This order was made some time before 4-5-1946, on which date the hearing of the case against Ak under S. 342, Penal Code, was set down for hearing.

[4] On 4-5-1946, when the case against Ak was called for hearing, the complainant Ismail was absent and the accused Ak was discharged under S. 259, Criminal P. C.

[5] On 8-5-1946 Ak made a petition to the District Maistrate, Nawabbshah, in which he stated : (After stating the complaint and the order of District Magistrate the judgment proceeded.)

[6] In pursuance of the search warrant issued by the learned District Magistrate, Nawabshah, on 11-5-1946, the police secured Mt. Hajran and her dughter Saran on 19-9-1946, and produced them before the learned District Magistrate on 22-9-1946, who recorded their statements on the same day, but passed no further orders.

[7] It appears that the learned District Magistrate had required the Sub-divisional Magistrate, Naushahro, to submit the record and proceedings in the case in which Ismail had filed a complaint against Ak under Ss. 342 and 498, Penal Code, with his report. The report of the Sub-divisional Magistrate, Naushahro, was received by the District Magistrate on 15-9-1946. Nearly a month later, on 10-10-1946, the District Magistrate disposed of the petition filed by Ak by issuing process against the applicant, Nur Muhammad Shah, Allah Obhayo, Sobdarkhan, Ismail and Jumo under S. 120B read with Ss. 366 and 363, Penal Code. It is against this complaint that the applicant has come in revision.

[8] In disposing of this application, we do not propose to take any notice of the allegations made by the applicant in para. 1 of his application in which he has set out the reasons which prompted the learned District Magistrate to take cognizance of Ak's petition. We propose to dispose of the application in accordance with the law relating to cognisance of offences of criminal conspiracy.

[9] It is contended on behalf of the applicant that Ak had not filed a complaint against the applicant or anybody else, but had merely made a petition by which he sought to bring certain facts to the notice of the District Magistrate, and requested the District Magistrate to obtain sanction of the local Government for the prosecution of the applicant. There is some force in the contention, but for the purposes of this application we are prepared to regard it as a complaint.

[10] The question arises whether the District Magistrate was competent to take cognizance of the offence of criminal conspiracy as alleged by Ak, without the consent of the Local Government as required by S. 196A, Criminal P. C. It is to be observed that the learned District Magistrate has issued process under S. 120B, Penal Code read with Ss. 366 and 363, Penal Code. But in the complaint made by Ak on 8-5-1946 nowhere is it alleged that the object of the conspiracy was to commit an offence under S. 366 or S. 363, Penal Code. Far from alleging that the object of the conspiracy was to take Mt. Hajran away by force or by fraud, or to kidnap Saran, Ak has, strangely enough, stated in the petition that Mt. Hajran was infatuated with Ismail, and had promised Ismail that if she were taken out anywhere, she and her elder daughter Saran would desert Ak and follow Ismail, and that with this end in view, Ismail had sought the assistance of Nur Mahomed Shah M. L. A., and approached the applicant.

[11] It is contended on behalf of the Crown that this arrangement implied coercion in the form of securing the attendance of Mt. Hajran and her daughter Mt. Saran under compulsion of law. But whatever were the means adopted for securing the attendance of Hajran and Saran in Court, they were not the object of the conspiracy to which the applicant and the other accused are alleged to be parties. The object if any was to cause to be filed a false complaint under Ss. 498 and 342, Penal Code, so as to compell the attendance of Hajran and Saran in Court. According to Ak's complaint Hajran was willing to attend Court if she was ordered to do so, by a Court of law. We cannot then see how the object of the conspiracy was to abduct Hajran or to kidnap Saran. As we have said, the utmost that can be alleged is that the applicant conspired with Ismail to cause a false complaint under Ss. 498 and 342, Penal Code, to be filed against Ak. Such a conspiracy would clearly attract the provisions of S. 196A, Criminal P. C., for an offence under S. 498, Penal Code, is non-cognisable, and an offence under S. 342, Penal Code although cognisable is only punishable with one year. Section 196A says: (After quoting the section, the judgment proceeded.)

[12] The learned Advocate-General has contended that the statements recorded by the learned District Magistrate in pursuance of the complaint made by Ak should be taken into consideration for the purpose of ascertaining the nature of the conspiracy disclosed; even so, S. 196A prescribes a bar to the taking of cognizance of the offence of criminal conspiracy punishable under S. 120B, Penal Code, if the object of the conspiracy is to commit any non-cognizable offence, or a cognizable offence not punishable with death, transportation or rigorous imprisonment for a term of two years or upwards, unless the Local Government, or a Chief Presidency Magistrate or District Magistrate empowered in this behalf by the Local Government has, by order in writing, consented to the initiation of the proceedings, and in our opinion the object, if any, of the alleged conspiracy clearly was to cause a false complaint to be filed in order to secure the attendance of Hajran and Saran—an offence punishable under S. 211, Penal Code. An offence of criminal conspiracy to cause a false complaint to be filed of enticing a married woman and unlawfully confining her, the one a non-cognizable offence and the other though cognizable punishable with less than two years, clearly requires the consent of the local Government by reason of the provisions of S. 196A, Criminal P. C.

[13] In the view we take, that the cognizance of a conspiracy, the object of which was to file or cause to be filed a false complaint under Ss. 498 and 342, Penal Code is barred by the provisions of S. 196A, Criminal P. C. it is not necessary to consider the application of S. 197, Criminal P. C.

[14] We would accordingly quash the complaint filed by the learned District Magistrate, Nawabshah, and all the proceedings taken upon that complaint.

First Appeal No. 35 of 1944, Decided on 23-1-1947.

Specific Relief Act (1877), S. 55—Opening of new windows overlooking neighbour's land—No invasion of neighbour's right to or enjoyment of property — Neighbour has right to place erection against such windows on his own land — Mandatory injunction to close windows cannot be granted —Easements Act (1882), S. 18.

Before a perpetual injunction can be granted under S. 54 there must be an invasion or a threat of invasion of the plaintiff's right to or enjoyment of his property. The mere opening of a window by a man in a building on his own property cannot constitute an invasion of or a threat to invade the rights to or enjoyment of, his neighbour's property except in those rare cases where a custom as to right of privacy is provable. [Paras 15 & 16]

Invasion of privacy by opening a window which overlooks another man's grounds, is not recognized by law as a wrongful act. The opening of a new window, being in itself an innocent act, cannot therefore destroy existing rights in one party, or give new, or revive old rights in another : Tapling v. Jones, (1865) 145 R. R. 192, Foll. [Para 20]

A man has no inherent right to obstruct his neighbour's windows. He has merely the right to place any erection on his own land subject to any right which has by law accrued to his neighbour. [Para 21]

Where the defendant built upon his own land and opened several windows overlooking the plaintiff's land and the plaintiff obstructed the windows by putting up wooden planks thereon which the defendant removed, it was held that no mandatory injunction directing the defendant to close the windows could be granted as there was no invasion of the plaintiff's right: 28 A.I.R. 1941 Oudh 442, Rel. on; 9 A. Tikamdas Bassarmal—for Appellants.

Kimatrai Bhojraj—for Respondent.

O'Sullivan J.—This is an appeal against the judgment and decree in a suit in which Lobo J. granted respondent (plaintiff) a mandatory injunction against the appellant (defendant) directing him to close the 12 windows in a building of which he is the owner.

[2] The parties own contiguous plots of lands roughly square in shape, the south-west corner of the appellant's land meeting that of the respondent at a point on the north-west side; that is to say, the two areas adjoin diagonally.

[3] There is a gully or lane some 3 feet wide and a few yards long running the length of the appellant's land on the southern side and giving access to the respondent's land. Both areas were originally owned by the same person who in the year 1926 sold out to the predecessors-in-title of the parties to the suit.

[4] The title deeds in favour of the appellant make no mention of this lane to which reference has been made above. Those in favour of the respondent, however, do mention the lane as a boundary but do not make it clear that it was conveyed to the respondent's predecessor-in-title.

[5] Both the areas in question have been built upon, as also the area to the south of the lane which is owned by somebody, who is not a party to this suit, and whose building has windows looking out upon the lane.

[6] In the year 1929 the appellant erected on his land a three storied building in which on the southern side he opened 12 windows (four on each floor) overlooking the lane.

[7] On 28th August 1940 respondent filed the present suit praying

"for a perpetual mandatory injunction ordering the defendant (appellant) to close the said 12 windows and apertures in the southern wall of his building adjoining the plaintiff's (respondent's) building and costs of the suit."

[8] In strict point of fact, as has already been made clear, the 12 windows do not overlook respondent's building, but the lane which is unbuilt upon.

[9] The respondent in his plaint asserted that he was the owner of the lane; that the appellant had not acquired any right or easement in respect of the said windows or apertures which, therefore, constituted "a trespass to plaintiff's property," and that about January 1940 the appellant was called upon to close the said windows but refused to do so, and "on the contrary removed wooden planks put up by the plaintiff against the said windows and appertures."

[10] The appellant in his written statement denied any trespass and, inter alia, pleaded that the lane was not the respondent's property; that he and his predecessors-in-title had used the lane as of right and without interruption, and that the respondent who had been aware of the opening of these windows for a number of years had delayed in taking any action, and was debarred from objecting to their existence at this stage.

[11] Lobo J. found that the respondent was the owner of the lane; that he was in occupation of his property including the lane through his tenants, and that he was entitled to a mandatory injunction against the appellant directing him to close the 12 windows in question.

[12] The first argument put forward by Mr. Tikamdas for the appellant is in substance that the respondent had no cause of action. He questions the finding of Lobo J. as to the ownership of the lane but argues that assuming the lane was owned by the respondent, the opening by the appellant of his 12 windows was an innocent act, an act he is entitled to do in law, and does not constitute trespass and that no injunction can be granted directing him to close his windows.

[13] We consider the contentions of Mr. Tikamdas well founded, and indeed obvious, and since the appeal can properly be decided on this ground, it is unnecessary to discuss the question of the ownership of the lane. In the circumstances of the case, the appellant's contention as to his having acquired prescriptive rights does not arise.

[14] Mr. Kimatrai first contended that the act of the appellant in opening the 12 windows constituted trespass. He contended that it was a trespass against the privacy of the respondent. He was invited to explain how the opening of the windows in any way infringed the rights of the respondent or affected his enjoyment of his property, but Mr. Kimatrai was unable to do so, and on his attention being invited to the provisions of S. 54, Specific Relief Act and to the well-known decisions of the House of Lords in (1865) 145 R. R. 192,[1] (to which a more detailed reference will hereafter be made), he abandoned the argument as to trespass, and proceeded on other lines.

[15] Section 54, Specific Relief Act lays it down that:

"Subject to the other provisions contained in, or referred to by, this Chapter, a perpetual injunction may be granted to prevent the breach of an obligation existing in favour of the applicant, whether expressly or by implication.

When such obligation arises from contract, the Court shall be guided by the rules and provisions contained in Chap. II of this Act.

When the defendant invades or threatens to invade the plaintiff's right to or enjoyment of, property, the Court may grant a perpetual injunction in the following cases (namely):

(a) where the defendant is trustee of the property for the plaintiff;

(b) where there exists no standard for ascertaining the actual damage caused, or likely to be caused, by the invasion;

(c) where the invasion is such that pecuniary compensation would not afford adequate relief."

As this section makes it clear there must, before a perpetual injunction may be granted, be an invasion or a threat of invasion of the plaintiff's right to or enjoyment of his property and it is manifest that the mere opening of a window by a man in a building in his own property cannot constitute an invasion of or a threat to invade the rights to or enjoyment of, his neighbour's property.

[16] This is of course subject to those rare cases in which a custom as to right of privacy is provable. There is no question in this case of such a custom.

[17] It was Mr. Kimatrai's second contention that his cause of action was not trespass, as specifically pleaded in the plaint, but was the removal by the appellant of the planks which respondent had erected against appellant's windows. It would appear from the reference in the plaint to these planks, and from the respondent's own evidence, that they had been nailed or otherwise affixed to the appellant's windows. The plaint refers to them as having been "put up" by the respondent "against the said windows", and the respondent's own evidence is that he "boarded up these windows and apertures soon after the defendant purchased the property about 4 years ago." The respondent then refers to certain correspondence that passed between the parties, and a letter written on his behalf by his lawyers, to the appellant's lawyers, dated 8th January 1940. This letter says that "we regret your client has not yet removed the wooden planks fixed against the windows." If, as seems clear, the planks were affixed by the respondent to the appellant's property this, prima facie, constituted a trespass by the respondent. The respondent would not be entitled to affix any planks to the appellant's wall. If, however, as Mr. Kimatrai now contends the respondent merely built an erection upon his own land so as to shut out appellant's light and air, he was fully entitled to do so subject to any prescriptive rights which the appellant had acquired as to light and air. But a further difficulty stands in Mr. Kimatrai's way. His plaint is clearly based on trespass constituted by the opening of the windows, and not on the action of the appellant in pulling down the plainks, and, as has already been made clear, the prayer is for a mandatory injunction directing that the appellant should close his windows.

[18] Mr. Kimatrai pressed us to hold that since the appellant had pulled down respondent's planks, the latter was entitled to ask the Court to direct the appellant to close his windows; and he referred us to the following passage in the judgment of Lobo J. in which his contention appears to have been accepted :

"It has been contended by the learned advocate for the defendant that the plaintiff's remedy is in his own hands. It is for him to close the windows and apertures if he considers them a trespass, and if the defendant removes any obstructions put up by the plaintiff, the plaintiff can then come to Court and seek remedy by an injunction. The argument, however, is without substance. If the plaintiff has the right to close the windows and apertures in suit, he has surely the right to ask the Court to do so. It is idle to contend that the plaintiff should engage in a continuous battle with the defendant, the plaintiff closing his (defendant's) windows and apertures, and the defendant breaking down the obstruction to his windows and apertures. There is no substance in the contentions of the defendant raised in para. 10 of his written statement, and my answer to issue 6 therefore is in the negative."

[19] We consider there is no force in Mr. Kimatrai's argument, and that it is entirely met by the decision in (1865) 145 R. R. 192.[1]

"Invasion of privacy by opening a window which overlooks another man's grounds, is not recognized by law as a wrongful act.

The opening of a new window, being in itself an innocent act, cannot therefore destroy existing rights in one party, or give new, or revive old rights in another."

[21] Mr. Kimatrai's argument under the second head involved some right by the respondent to "obstruct" the appellant's windows. But this is clearly misleading. The point is that a man has no inherent right to obstruct his neighbour's windows. He has merely the right to place any erection on his own land subject to any right which has by law accrued to his neighbour, and in this connexion I would refer to the very cogent observations in (1865) 145 R. R. 192[1] of both the Lord Chancellor (Lord Westbury) and Lord Cranworth: Lord Westbury, L. C. said:

"Before dealing with the present appeal, it may be useful to point out some expressions which are found in the decided cases, and which seem to have a tendency to mislead; one of these expressions is the phrase 'right to obstruct.' If my adjoining neighbour builds upon his land, and opens numerous windows which look over my gardens or my pleasure grounds, I do not acquire from this act of my neighbour any new or other right than I before possessed. I have simply the same right of building or raising any erection I please on my own land, unless that right has been by some antecedent matter either lost or impaired, and I gain no new or enlarged right by the act of my neighbour.

Again, there is another form of words which is often found in the cases on this subject, namely the phrase 'invasion of privacy by opening windows.' That is not treated by the law as a wrong for which any remedy is given. If A is the owner of beautiful gardens and pleasure grounds, and B is the owner of an adjoining piece of land, B may build on it a manufactory with a hundred windows overlooking the pleasure grounds, and A has neither more nor less than the right, which he previously had, of erecting on his land a building of such height and extent as will shut out the windows of the newly erected manufactory . . . .

By opening the new windows he does no injury or wrong in the eye of the law to his neighbour, who is at liberty to build up against them, so far as he possesses the right of so building on his land."

Lord Cranworth said :

"I am unable to comprehend the principle on which such a claim can rest. Where a person has wrongfully obstructed another in the enjoyment of an easement, as, for instance, by building a wall across a path over which there is a right of way, public or private, any person so unlawfully obstructed may remove the obstruction; and if any damage thereby arises to him who wrongfully set it up, he has no right to complain. His own wrongful act justified what would otherwise have been a trespass. But this depends entirely on the circumstances that the act of erecting the wall was a wrongful act, whereas the opening of a window is not an unlawful act. Every man may open any number of windows looking over his neighbour's land; and, on the other hand, the neighbour may, by building on his own land within 20 years after the opening of the window, obstruct the light which would otherwise reach it. Some confusion seems to have arisen from speaking of the right of the neighbour in such a case, as a right to obstruct the new lights. His right is a right to use his own land by building on it as he thinks most to his interests; and if by doing so he obstructs the access of light to the new windows, he is doing that which affords no ground of complaint. He has a right to build, and if thereby he obstructs the new lights, he is not committing a wrong. But what ground is there for contending that, because his building so as to obstruct a new light would afford no ground of complaint, therefor, if he cannot so build without committing a trespass, he may commit a trespass? I can discover no principle to warrant any such inference."

[22] Mr. Kimatrai made no attempt to discuss the principles as laid down in (1865) 145 R. R. 192,[1] but referred us to certain Indian cases. He first cited 24 Bom. L. R. 305[2] and referred in particular to the following passage in the judgment of Macleod C. J.:

"The Statute of Limitation entitles the plaintiff to seek relief by means of an injunction against a party seeking to establish an easement against him within 20 years."

[23] The facts of that case are not parallel. The defendant projected certain eaves over the plaintiff's land and discharged rain water from these eaves on into the plaintiff's lands, and it was held, decreeing the claim for an injunction, that the defendant in erecting his building in defiance of the plaintiff's rights, did so at his own risk; and that there was no equity arising from plaintiff's acquiescence, since there would be no more expense to the defendant in obeying the injunction than there could have been if the suit had been brought shortly after the defendant erected his building.

[24] With this decision we are in agreement; but the point to be made clear is that the defendant in erecting his building infringed the plaintiff's right by projecting eaves over the plaintiff's land and discharging rain water over the plaintiff's land. In the present case there is no case of infringement of the respondent's rights, as has already been made clear. The words of Macleod C. J., to which reference has been made, do not in our view imply that the plaintiff is entitled to an injunction against his neighbour directing his neighbour to refrain from doing anything which that neighbour is fully entitled to do, and the words must be read in the light of the facts with which Macleod C. J. was dealing.

[25] Mr. Kimatrai next referred to two decisions of the Lahore High Court, neither of which support him. In A. I. R. 1933 Lah. 847,[3] it was specifically held, to quote a portion of the head note, that :

"Every owner has got the right to open apertures in his own wall and unless by doing so he invades the privacy or any other pre-existing and well established right vested in his neighbour, the latter cannot force him to close the apertures. The neighbour's remedy is to build on his own land or otherwise obstruct the apertures."

The words 'otherwise obstruct the apertures' refer, presumably, to something which the plaintiff may do on his own land. It is true that Tekchand J. in that case went on to say that although there was no legal ground for granting the injunction and that injunction was not the proper relief, the plaintiff was entitled to redress by grant of pecuniary compensation.

[26] We are unable to agree that any redress by way of pecuniary compensation is payable in a case such as that before us.

[27] The other Lahore case referred to was A. I. R. 1924 Lah. 628.[4] The facts of that case are not in point. The dispute between the parties was in relation to a party wall, and as Le Rossignol J., said :

"The finding of both Courts is that the plaintiff wished to build against the windows and the defendant objected; in my opinion, this gave plaintiff a right of action, for his liberty of dealing with his own property was threatened."

It was, as is clear, a finding of fact that the plaintiff wished to deal with his own property, and the defendant was obstructing him from doing so.

[28] Mr. Tikamdas referred to 16 Luck. 686,[5] which is in point. To quote the head note in that case :

"The grant of an absolute injunction under S. 54, Specific Relief Act restraining the defendant from enjoying his own land is wholly illegal where there is no obligation in favour of the plaintiff to restrain the defendant from so enjoying his property.

Where the defendant opens doors on his own land he cannot be legally ordered to close them merely because of the plaintiff's apprehension that if the doors are allowed to stand the defendant may acquire a right of easement to light and air after the lapse of 20 years."

[29] Finally Mr. Kimatrai asked that we should grant a declaration in favour of the respondent as to his right to obstruct the appellant's windows by building on his (respondent's) own land, or alternatively that he should be permitted to amend the plaint so as to include a prayer for an injunction restraining the appellant from interfering with any erection the respondent may make on his own land with a view to obstructing the appellant's windows.

[30] We cannot say that on the facts and circumstances of this case any such reliefs are open to the respondent. It has been made sufficiently clear already that any man may build upon his own property subject to any antecedent rights acquired by his neighbour. In particular, with regard to the request for amendment of the plaint, no details have been furnished to us with regard to the nature of the required amendment. In any event, we cannot say that any question arises of the amendment of the plaint, because the appellant has not, so far as we can ascertain, pulled down any structures which the respondent made upon his own land.

[31] Assuming we had any discretion to grant these requests by Mr. Kimatrai, it is clearly not a case in which such discretion should be exercised. There has been considerable delay in the bringing of this action. The appellant built upon his property and opened his windows in the year 1929, and it was not until 11 years later in 1940 that the respondent filed the present proceeding. Again we cannot say that on the facts as presented to us, the respondent has been in the very least damnified or affected by the action of the appellant. There are already windows on one side overlooking the lane, and it has not been suggested in the plaint how the appellant's windows on the other side of the lane in any way constitute a nuisance. It was, admittedly, suggested in the evidence of the respondent that the appellant's tenants were in the habit of throwing rubbish into the lane, but there is no such plea in the plaint and the fact was never in issue. Moreover, it is manifest that if the appellant or his tenants do commit a nuisance in this form, they may be restrained by appropriate action.

[32] In the result, we have no hesitation in allowing this appeal with costs throughout. Order accordingly.

Where the accused was charged of "having made preparations to cause hurt, etc., committed housebreaking by night by entering into the building belonging to complainant and used as dwelling house in order to the commission of certain offence punishable with imprisonment to wit an offence of causing hurts etc. . . ." and there was no reference to and much less any definite allegation of any intention to commit adultery with any married woman in the charge and no allegation was made by any of the prosecution witnesses in their examination-in-chief that the accused had gone to the house that night for purpose of committing adultery; and the question of adultery with married woman was not in issue:

Held, that the accused could not be convicted of housebreaking with intention of committing adultery. [Para 48]

(b) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 233 — Charge must be for distinct offence.

There must be a charge for every distinct offence and it must be formulated with precision. The precise charge framed is to be tried and tried separately, except in the cases mentioned in Ss. 234 to 236 and S. 239. [Para 17]

To sustain a conviction for adultery, it must be established inter alia that sexual intercourse was committed without the consent or connivance of the husband, and to sustain a conviction under S. 451, Penal Code, for offence of house-trespass with intent to commit an offence, the offence being adultery, it is necessary to show that there has been no consent or connivance on the part of the husband of the woman : 19 All. 74, Ref. [Para 22]

The onus to show that there was no connivance or consent of the husband is on the prosecution. [Para 23]

(d) Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 237 and 537 — Applicability.

Where it is not a case of conviction for an offence other than the one for which the accused was charged, S. 237 has no application. The section does not cover the case of a conviction for another or more aggravated form of the same offence but for another offence. No prejudice is deemed to arise when conditions referred to in this section and S. 238 are fulfilled : 5 S. L. R. 16, Ref. [Para 28]

(f) Evidence Act (1872), Ss. 105 and 106, 102— Scope of.

The burden of proving the existence of circumstances bringing the case within a general or special exception is no doubt cast upon the accused by S. 105 but this does not in any way absolve the prosecution of the burden laid on it by S. 102 so far as the entire "proceeding" is concerned. If at the close of the whole evidence, there is reasonable doubt as to the guilt of the accused, the benefit of that doubt should be given to the accused and he is entitled to be acquitted : (1935) A. (g) Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 225, 232 and 537— Applicability—Charge not irregular but conviction not warranted by charge—Sections, if apply.

Where the charge is quite in order, it cannot be said that there is an "error" in charge because the evidence for the prosecution is subsequently at the trial found to be false or insufficient to establish the charge. When conviction is had in such case for offence not included in the charge Ss. 225, 232 or 537 would not apply, for the reason that there is nothing irregular in the charge as such. K. H. Nagrani — for Appellant.
Fatehchand Assudomal, Advocate-General of Sind — for the Crown.

Judgment.— This criminal appeal and confirmation case comes before me in consequence of a difference of opinion between my brothers Tyabji and Meher.

[2] The facts of the case, the findings of the Court below and the main points taken in the Appellate Court are set out in the judgment of Tyabji J. as follows :

"The appellant Waroo s/o Juman has been convicted by the Additional Sessions Judge, Larkana, at Hyderabad of offences under Ss. 458, 324 and 302, Penal Code. He has been sentenced to death under S. 302, to 12 months rigorous imprisonment under S. 458 and 18 months rigorous imprisonment under S. 324. He has appealed and the case also comes up before us for confirmation of the death sentence passed.

The offence, it is alleged, took place after mid-night during the early hours of 29-12-1945, at Hala, and the facts of the case are as follows: Deceased Misri lived in a house, consisting of a covered hall with a court-yard in front of it, with his wife Khatul, and three sons of Khatul by her former husband, Ali Mahomed. Of these, Abdulla and Kassim were in Misri's house on the night in question. Mussamat Wasul, a daughter of Khatul and Alimahomed, had also been staying for some days in the house. Alimahomed, the previous husband of Khatul, had died many years ago, and after his death Khatul had married Misri some 8 or 10 years ago. Thereafter Khatul and her sons lived in Misri's house. Misri had a cow which used to be kept in his courtyard. To the west and adjoining Misri's house was a house belonging to Jurio, who was a brother of Alimahomed and had died about a year before the incident. Jurio's house, as the sketch (Ex. 6) shows, consisted of two rooms, a 'soofo' (hall) in front of the two rooms and a court-yard in front of the hall. Misri's house was divided from Jurio's house by a wall, but there was an open space between the courtyard of Misri's house (called "verandah" in Ex. 6) and the court-yard of Jurio's house. The only entrance to Jurio's house was through the court-yard of Misri's house, which was to the south of the 'hall' in which the inmates of Misri's household lived, and the only entrance to Misri's house from the outside was through a door on the eastern side of the court-yard in front of Misri's house. The result was that any one wishing to go to Jurio's house had to enter through the door leading to Misri's court-yard and pass across the court-yard in front of Misri's house and then enter the court-yard of Jurio's house. Jurio's house was lying vacant. The tapedar in his deposition described Jurio's house in Sindhi as "sunjo" and "Wiran," (deserted and in ruins) which was inaccurately recorded in English : "not occupied by any one." Abdulla stated : 'At the time of this incident no one was living in his (Jurio's) house.' Wasul, (Ex. 11) described the house as 'Jurio's unoccupied house.' The Sindhi word actually used by Wasul, which was translated as 'unoccupied,' was 'phital,' which means in ruins, abandoned, deserted. On the death of Jurio, Jurio's daughter, who was 12 or 13 years old, became the owner of Jurio's house. At the time of the incident she was living with her mother, who had remarried, at Old Hala. Abdulla stated that the house of Jurio was 'in our possession' at the time of the incident. To the west of Jurio's house was the house of one Hamid Memon. There was a wall dividing Jurio's house and Hamid's house, which was 5½ feet high. To the south of the houses of Misri and Jurio was the house of Saleh. The southern and the eastern walls of the court-yard of Jurio's house divided the houses of Jurio and Saleh, and this wall was 6 feet and 10 inches in height.

The inmates of the house of Misri, namely Misri, Khatul, Abdullah, Kassim and Wasul, went to sleep in their house on the night of 28-12-1945, after closing the door by which one could enter into Misri's house. Khatul was waked up at about midnight and saw something as a result of which she waked up her husband Misri and her sons Abdullah and Kassim. Khatul has described what happened in these words :

'At midnight I woke up to give grass to the cow. I took the lamp and went into the court-yard. I saw my daughter in our court-yard. She had her child on her lap. I saw 4 persons in front of the room of Jurio's house. I enquired from my daughter what it was She made no reply and went to the hall of our house. I followed her there. I woke up Misri, Kassim and Abdullah'

Wasul (Ex 11) in her examination-in-chief, after stating that she had been intimate with the appellant about a year and a half before but had given up that connection some 5 or 8 months before the incident, explained the circumstances in which her mother Khatul woke up on that night and called out her brothers and Misri, in these words :

'At about 2 a. m. accused Waru came and woke me up and asked me to go out to the court-yard. He then went out to the court-yard. I took up my boy who was 1½ year old and followed him to the court-yard of Jurio's house. I saw accused 2, 3 and 4 there. Waru said that he had brought these three men to take me away. At that time my boy wept and I told Waroo that I would give him reply after making the boy stop from crying. I then went to the court-yard of my house. At that time I saw my mother in the court-yard with the lamp. She inquired what it was. I made no reply. My mother went and woke up Misri, Abdullah and Kassim and brought them. We then went to Jurio's court-yard where . . . .' What happened thereafter was described by Abdullah, Kassim, Khatul and Wasul in very similar terms. They alleged that Misri, Abdullah and Kassim, on receiving the information from Khatul, immediately ran up to the court-yard of Jurio's house unarmed and carrying a lamp with them. There they saw the appellant and three of the relations of the appellant, Sono s/o Juman, Allahdino s/o Saleh and Mahomed s/o Kadirbux, of whom all except the appellant on seeing the witnesses, jumped over the wall into the house of Saleb. The appellant also tried to run away, but deceased Misri, who was ahead of Abdullah and Kassim, reached and tried to catch the appellant, whereupon the appellant gave Misri two blows with a hatchet as a result of which Misri fell down seriously injured. Abdullah then tried to catch the appellant, who also struck Abdullah with the hatchet. Then Abdullah with the assistance of Kassim caught hold of the hatchet, which was in the hands of the appellant, and wrested it from the appellant. On this the appellant took out a knife from the folds of his salwar and struck Abdullah and Kassim with the knife. Thereupon Abdullah struck the appellant on the head with the hatchet, which Abdullah had snatched from the appellant. After this the appellant scaled over the wall, jumped into the compound of Saleh and thereafter ran away, getting out of Saleh's compound by jumping over the wall of Saleh's compound on the eastern side. Witness Hamid, whose house was to the west of Jurio's house, stated that he was sleeping in his house, when he heard cries coming from Misri's house, whereupon he got up and saw everything that took place in Jurio's courtyard, from the time that Misri ran up to the appellant, up to the time when the appellant ran away. Witness Waru Sand (Ex. 18) lived in a house some 150 paces to the east of Misri's house. He stated that he woke up on hearing cries, and, taking up a hatchet, ran towards Misri's house and saw the appellant, as he jumped over the eastern wall of Saleh's house, and left Saleh's compound. This witness Waru Sand, stated that he did not see any weapon in the hand of the appellant when he ran away. These witnesses, Hamid, and Waru, immediately went to Misri's house where they were told all that had happened. A little later Abdullah went to the Hala Police station, which was a short distance away, and made a report about the incident at 3-30 a. m. in which he stated :

'The complaint is that I with my relations, uncle Misri Kassim and other members of my family after closing the outer gate and locking it at about 10 p. m., went to sleep. Around this house there is a small compound of Katcba bricks. At about 2 at night my mother Musammat Khatul got up to give fodder to cow. She saw one person near Sufa in the compound of house of my deceased uncle Jurio's house which was lying vacant. She informed me. Upon this I informed my uncle Misri and brother Kassim. After taking the lantern which was burning in our house we all three went to the thieves. We saw three persons coming out of the vacant sufa (main hall) of my uncle Jurio's house and tried to run away. The sufa has no door. In the light of the lantern we identified the three persons. They were Sono son of Juman, Saleh son of Kassim and Allahdino son of Saleh Junani and lived nearby. These three ran away by jumping over the wall. There remained Waru who had been caught by our uncle Misri. We two brothers had also reached the place. In the meantime Waru who had hatchet in hand gave a hatchet blow to uncle Misri which fell on his neck. Due to this blow uncle Misri fell down. We cried 'thief thief.' Kassim my brother tried to catch hold of Waru. Waru tried to strike hatchet blow to him also but my brother caught his hatchet and we snatched hatchet from him. Waru then gave 2-3 injuries of a knife which was in his hand to my brother. He also gave me one injury on my shoulder, with the knife. My brother also due to injuries fell down. I also gave one hatchet blow to Waru. By this time Hamid Memon on our cries came in our house by jumping over the wall. Seeing him coming Waru also ran away by crossing the wall. Hamid saw him scaling. After a short time Waru Sand also came there. On being asked by Waru Sand, I and Hamid Memon narrated the story of thieves. The condition of uncle Misri and brother Kassim is serious and they are lying on the scene of offence. I went to Fateh Mahomed my brother-in-law who lives here at Hala and told him about the occurrence and thereafter I have come here to lodge a report. I am making this report. Investigation may be held. The hatchet secured from Waru accused is also lying on the scene of offence. Nothing has been stolen.

It may be noted here-that there is no reference to Wasul, or to any intimacy between the appellant and Wasul in this report, in which the allegation, against the four offenders, was that they had entered Jurio's house for the purposes of committing theft, that they had been seen there before anything was stolen, that three of the offenders had then run away, but the fourth, the appellant who had been caught by Misri, had caused injuries to Misri, Abdullah and Kassim.

After recording the report, the Head Constable in charge went to the scene where he found Misri lying in a very serious condition. Misri died very shortly thereafter as a result of his injuries. Kassim and Abdullah were sent to the Hala dispensary for treatment. Two of the persons mentioned in the first information and one Mahmood s/o Kadirbux were arrested in their houses at 5 a. m. The appellant was not found in his house and the Head Constable on receiving information that the appellant had gone to his brother who lived at Khandu village, went to Khandu. On the way, when the Head constable was some 2 miles away from the scene of offence, he met the appellant, who appeared to be coming from the direction of Khandu. The appellant had an injury on his head and was wearing a shirt which was blood-stained. The Head constable then arrested the appellant and secured the shirt. The appellant then took the police and mashirs to Khandu village where he produced a pair of blood stained trousers and socks, which were also secured by the Head constable. The appellant was brought back to Hala by 9-30 or 10 a. m. and produced before the Sub-Inspector, who took charge of the investigation. The Sub-Inspector then proceeded to the scene of offence and made a mashirnama. A blood-stained hatchet, alleged to be the hatchet used by the appellant, was produced before the Sub-Inspector and was secured by him. The Sub-Inspector also found two keys lying at the scene in Jurio's courtyard. On visiting the house of the appellant later two locks were secured from the house and it was found that the keys secured at the scene fitted them.

The Medical evidence in the case shows that Misri had two injuries:

1. A curved incised wound $1\frac{1}{2}'' \times \frac{1}{2}''$ skin deep on the left angle of mandible.

2. An incised wound $4\frac{1}{2}'' \times 2''$ cutting the muscles and blood vessels of the 4th and the 5th cervical vertebrae extending from the middle part of the cervical part of the left side vertebral column up to 1" above the junction of the middle third and the inner third of the left clavicle.

The second injury which was on the neck was clearly sufficient to cause death, and there could be no question about this injury having actually caused the death of Misri.

Witness Kassim had two incised wounds on his shoulders, and one, an incised wound $\frac{3}{4}'' \times \frac{1}{4}'' \times 1''$ on the right scapula and the other $\frac{3}{4}'' \times \frac{1}{4}''$ skin deep on the left scapula; and a longitudinal contusion 6" × 10" on the left lumber region. The doctor who was examined

(Ex. 30) stated that the two incised wounds could have been caused by a hatchet and the contusion would have been caused by a blunt weapon such as a lathi.

Witness Abdullah had one incised wound $1\frac{1}{2}'' \times 2'' \times 2''$ on his left shoulder, which, in the opinion of the doctor "had been caused by some weapon such as hatchet."

The appellant had an incised wound $1\frac{1}{2}'' \times \frac{1}{4}''$ cutting the bone on the left parietal region, which was caused, in the opinion of the doctor, by a "sharp weapon such as hatchet." The doctor described this as a very serious injury, which was 'sufficient in ordinary course of nature to cause death,' and which would require more than three weeks to cure.

The charge framed by the Committing Magistrate against the four accused in this case was as follows: 'I, Harbuxrai Radhakrishin, Magistrate First Class, hereby charge you (1) Waroo Juman Junani, (2) Sono Juman Junani, (3) Allahdino Saleh Junani and (4) Mahmood Kadir Bux Junani as follows: That you, on or about the 29-12-1945, at Hala New, having made preparations to cause hurt, etc., committed house-breaking by night by entering into the building belonging to the complainant Abdullah and used as human dwelling in order to the commission of certain offence punishable with imprisonment to wit an offence of causing hurts, etc., and that you Waroo did commit murder by knowingly causing death of Misri and caused (voluntarily) hurts with sharp weapon such as hatchet to Abdullah and Kassim, and thereby committed an offence punishable under Ss. 302, 324 and 458, Penal Code, and within the cognizance of the Court of Session.

And I hereby direct that you be tried by the Court of Sessions, Hyderabad, on the said charge.

Dated this 26th day of February 1946.'

This charge was not amended and was the charge on which the appellant and the other accused were tried before the Sessions Court.

The three other accused who were tried along with the appellant pleaded that they were not guilty as they were not present at the time of the alleged incident. The appellant in his statement before the Committing Magistrate attempted to show that the incident had taken place not in Jurio's courtyard, but on the street near the appellant's own house, a considerable distance away, where Kassim, Misri and Abdullah had gone in order to fight with the appellant, and where Abdullah had struck him with a hatchet. The appellant explained that Wasul was intimate with him and had gone to his house on that day. In the Sessions Court the appellant admitted that he had gone to Jurio's house on receiving a message from Wasul. His account of what took place was as follows : 'Wasul was intimate with me since 6 or 7 years. On the day of this incident she had sent me a message to meet her in Jurio's house. I went at 10 P. M., and was standing in front of the house of Saleh who is my brother-in-law, when Misri and Kassim came out from their house and fought with me. While grappling with each other I, Misri and Kassim fell inside the courtyard of Misri's house. I got up when Abdullah came and gave me a blow and Misri got on me and we fell down. When Misri was on my top he received an axe blow and he called out 'You killed me.' I do not know who gave him that blow. I was under him. I then got myself released from his hold and climbed over the wall between Jurio's house and Saleh's house and went to Saleh's house and from there I ran away to the Khad and fell down there after I had run a short distance. I became unconscious. In the morning I recovered consciousness. I then went to my house, saw the Jamadar and other police there. The Jamadar arrested me and secured my shirt, trousers and socks, articles K and M. I had no weapon. I did not cause any injury to any one. I have nothing more to say.'

The first information in the case and the charge framed by the Committing Magistrate have already been set out above. The intention with which the house, in which criminal trespass was alleged to have been committed, was entered, was stated in the charge as: "in order to the commission of certain offence punishable with imprisonment to wit an offence of causing hurts." It has already been pointed out before that the first information in substance showed that an offence of criminal trespass had been committed by four persons, who had entered the compound of the house of Jurio in order to commit theft, but who had run away, on being seen, before any theft had actually been committed. The evidence given by the prosecution witnesses in the case was entirely in accordance with these allegations. For instance, witness Abdulla stated : 'We went to the courtyard of Jurio's house, which adjoins our courtyard, taking the lamp with ourselves and saw 4 men there. They were present 4 accused in Court. Waru and Sono had axes, while Allahdino and Mahmood had ringed lorhs. We raised cries of 'thief thief' and on that Sono Allahdino and Mahmood ran away to Saleh's house by jumping over the intervening southern wall, Misri tried to catch Waru who . . . . .'

There was no allegation in Abdullah's evidence of the appellant or any of the other accused having gone to the house, in which criminal trespass, it was alleged, had been committed, in order that any one of the accused should commit adultery with any married woman. As a matter of fact this suggestion was repudiated by Abdullah in his examination-in chief, and he stated : "I was not aware of Wasul's intimacy with Waru." Similarly witness Kassim stated : 'When we went to Jurio's compound, I saw 4 thieves. They were the present four accused in Court. When we proceeded 2 or 3 paces towards them, accused 2, 3 and 4 jumped over the southern wall and ran away to Saleb's house. Misri was ahead. As he proceeded . . . . .'

He also stated: "I do not know if Wasul was intimate with accused Waru." Khatul (Ex. 15) made an evasive reply when she was cross-examined with regard to the intimacy between the appellant and Wasul, when she stated : "I had heard a rumour that Wasul was intimate with Waru. I heard this about a month or two before this incident." It is clear from the facts, that (1) there was no reference to, and much less any definite allegation of, any intention to commit adultery with any married woman in the charge, and (2) that no allegation was made by any of the prosecution witnesses in their examination-in-chief that the appellant had gone to Jurio's house that night for the purpose of committing adultery, that it was not the prosecution case that this was the intention of the appellant upon which the prosecution relied for the purpose of proving the charge against the appellant. On the contrary it was the appellant, who, in order to disprove the prosecution allegation, as set forth in the charge, that the appellant and the three other accused had gone that night to the house in question in order to cause hurt, tried to prove that he had not only gone that night in order to meet Wasul, but had done so by appointment with Wasul. The defence got Wasul to admit : "Waru used to meet me in Jurio's unoccupied house at night secretly." The defence also obtained an admission from witness Hamid: "About 20 days before this incident Khatul had told me that I should speak to Waru not to come to their house. Wasul was intimate with Waru since 2 or 3 years." This statement also shows that Wasul had been living in Misri's house for a much longer period than 2 or 3 days before the incident. From the notes of arguments kept by the learned Judge (Ex. 41) it is clear that the Assistant Public Prosecutor, who appeared for the Crown in the case, relied on the intention set out in the charge, and argued, that it was proved that the intention with which the accused had committed criminal trespass was "to cause hurt." It is also clear from the notes of the arguments of the advocate who appeared on behalf of the defence (Ex. 42), that the advocate argued that there was no criminal trespass, because even according to the prosecution (witnesses) the appellant had gone to meet Wasul by invitation.

One other fact with regard to the evidence at the trial deserves to be mentioned. One of the offenders mentioned in the first information was "Saleh s/o Kassim." During the investigation Mahmood s/o Kadirbux was substituted for Saleh s/o Kassim. The explanation given by Abdullah was: 'There I have given the name of Saleh which is a mistake for Mahmood. In fact Saleh was not there and Mahmood was there. My head was reeling at the time when I made that statement.'

The other witnesses similarly implicated Mahmood and not Saleh. Accordingly Mahmood and not Saleh was challaned and tried along with the appellant.

The learned Sessions Judge came to the conclusion that the other accused, who were tried along with the appellant, were not at all present at the time of the incident and took no part in it, and he held: "It appears that Abdullah falsely implicated them, because they are near relations of accused Waroo. This sort of thing is not unusual." It may be mentioned that it was not only Abdullah who implicated the other three accused, but also Kassim, Khatul and Wasul. With regard to the case against the appellant, the learned Judge was of the opinion that the appellant had been clearly proved to be guilty of the offences with which he was charged. In arriving at this conclusion, the learned Judge accepted the defence allegation, that the appellant had gone that night to meet Wasul by previous appointment, for the learned Judge concluded: 'She (Wasul) admits that she was intimate with Waroo but had given up the connexion with him about a few months before this incident. I do not believe her on that point. To me it appears that she was still carrying on her love affairs with him and accused Waroo had come to meet her by previous appointment. In cross-examination she says that Waroo used to meet her in Jurio's house at night secretly and her relations did not know of it. It appears that on the night of this incident also he had come to meet her there and her child started crying, her mother woke up and saw them and informed her husband and sons who went and tried to catch Waroo and in the scuffle, Waroo first used his axe and when it was snatched from him, he took out a knife and caused injuries with it to them and then ran away.'

With regard to the question whether the appellant had committed an offence of house-breaking, the learned Judge concluded: 'I have no doubt in my mind that accused Waroo went to Jurio's house by climbing over the wall between Saleh and Jurio's house. The only entrance to that house is from the courtyard of Misri's house. As accused Waroo went to meet a married woman Wasul who was living with her brothers and mother at that time, who were surely not a party to this intrigue of hers, his offence would clearly be of housebreaking.'

It is clear that in the opinion of the learned Judge the intention of the appellant, which made his entry into Jurio's house a case of criminal trespass, was his intention to meet a married woman. On behalf of the appellant the words used 'to meet a married woman,' are stressed, and it is argued that the learned Judge did not even find that the intention of the appellant was to commit adultery with a married woman. But it is clear that that was what the learned Judge meant. As it was admitted that the appellant was attempting to run away and was not allowed to do so by Misri, who tried to catch him, in the first information it was stated that Misri had caught the appellant before the appellant struck Misri—the question, whether the appellant had the right to resist arrest in the exercise of the right of private defence, necessarily arose. The learned Sessions Judge dealt with this question in this manner: 'It may be mentioned here that some of the prosecution witnesses very foolishly tried to make out a case that Misri was struck before he had made any attempt to catch accused Waroo. Their original version, however, as shown in the first report and brought out in cross-examination from the police statements, is that Waroo was trying to climb over the wall when Misri reached him and on that he struck Misri. I think that is the correct version. This, however, does not give Waroo any right of private defence. He was a trespasser and he cannot plead right of private defence.'

With regard to the details of what actually took place, when Misri, Abdullah and Kassim approached the appellant and attempted to prevent him from escaping, the learned Sessions Judge accepted the evidence given by the witnesses in its entirety. He accepted their allegation that Misri, Abdullah and Kassim were wholly unarmed. He accepted their version that it was after the appellant had struck down Misri that Abdullah, who was unarmed, snatched the hatchet from the appellant. He accepted their allegation that the appellant thereafter took out a knife and caused injuries to Abdullah and Kassim with the knife, and that it was by way of self-defence that Abdullah then struck the appellant with the hatchet, which Abdullah had snatched from the appellant. The learned Judge's conclusion on these matters was stated by him in these words: 'We have had in evidence that Misri was not armed with any weapon. It appears that these three persons at dead of night hearing of Waroo having come to their house left their beds hurriedly and went to Jurio's house and tried to catch him. None of them appears to have been armed with a weapon, otherwise Waroo would have surely received some injuries besides the one which Abdullah gave him with his own hatchet after having snatched it from him. I am not prepared to believe the defence theory that in the dark either Abdullah or Kassim caused injuries to Misri when they actually wanted to hit Waroo. I have no doubt in my mind that the neck injury to Misri was caused by Waroo. His offence would clearly be that of murder. As regards the injuries caused to Abdullah and Kassim, there can also be no doubt that these injuries were caused to them by accused Waroo who after the axe was snatched from him took out a knife which he was carrying. The offence with regard to these injuries would fall under S. 324, Penal Code. It may be mentioned here that besides the incised injuries, Kassim had received one contused injury also which appears to have been caused with a blunt weapon. The defence, however, attached no importance to it and no questions were asked about this injury from Kassim. At the time of arguments I pointed out this to the Assistant Public Prosecutor in charge of prosecution, and he suggested that this injury may have been caused by a fall on some hard substance lying there. Considering the entire evidence I have no doubt that accused Waroo is guilty of having committed offences punishable under Ss. 302, 324 and 458, Penal Code.'

The learned Judge considered that the appellant was clearly guilty of murder, and passed the sentence of death under S. 302, because 'the evidence does not show that there was any mitigating circumstance.' He also passed the sentences under Ss. 324 and 458, which have already been mentioned before.

Mr. Nagrani, the learned advocate who appears on behalf of the appellant in this case, has in the main argued (1) that the learned Judge went beyond the charge when he found that the appellant was guilty because his intention was 'to meet a married woman,' which was not the intention in the charge or alleged by the prosecution witnesses; (2) that on the evidence in the case the conviction for house-breaking under S. 458 could not be maintained; (3) that the appellant had acted in the exercise of the right of private defence; and (4) that he had not exceeded his right. He argued, therefore, that the appellant had committed no offence."

[3] With regard to the first argument referred to in the last preceding paragraph, Tyabji J. was of the view that since the appellant (and others) had been charged with house-breaking in order to the commission of the particular offence of causing hurt, he could not properly be convicted of house-breaking with the intention of committing adultery with Wasul. My learned brother summed up his discussion on this aspect of the case in the following words:

"The appellant is entitled to contend that, as the prosecution case stood, he was not at all called upon to show that Wasul was in fact not married to Phatu. It was enough for him to show that he had gone to Jurio's house by appointment with Wasul, and that the intention with which he was charged had not been proved by the prosecution. On the other hand, if it had been a part of the prosecution case that the appellant had gone to Jurio's house in order to commit adultery with Wasul, who was lawfully married to Phatu, it would have been necessary for the prosecution to allege and prove the marriage strictly as part of their case. The appellant is entitled to say that if he had been charged with such an accusation, it would have been incumbent upon him to meet it, and he would then have proved that Wasul was not in fact married to Phatu. In view of the prosecution evidence as actually given and the charge framed, it was quite unnecessary for the appellant to disprove the allegation that Wasul was married to Phatu. It was made quite clear that the marriage was disputed. The case could not, therefore, be dealt with as if the marriage was admitted or an undisputed fact. In my view there is great force in this argument. It may or it may not be true that Wasul was the married wife of Phatu. The marriage was not admitted and formed no part of the prosecution case, either as stated in the charge or as presented by the prosecution witnesses. Had I been otherwise satisfied that the appellant was guilty of the offences of which he has been convicted, I would still have regarded this defect in the charge and in the presentation of the Crown case as a very grave one, and the convictions, in so far as they were based on the allegation, that the appellant's intention was to commit adultery, as illegal, and would have considered it necessary to order a retrial. I do not think that an essential element in a crime, without proof of which the conviction for the crime cannot be maintained, which was not admitted but was clearly disputed, should be held to be proved against an accused person, in the manner done in this case, without the accused having clear notice of the fact that it was alleged against him as part of the offence with which he was charged, and for which he was being tried. The grave prejudice likely to be caused by such a procedure is, I think, quite obvious."

[4] With regard to the second point urged on behalf of the appellant, that on the evidence in the case the conviction for house-breaking could not be sustained. Tyabji J. was of the view that no house-trespass had been proved because Jurio's house was not a building used as a human dwelling at the time of the offence. He emphasised that the terms of S. 442 must be satisfied, and came to the conclusion that since Jurio's house was unoccupied and in a state of dilapidation, it was not a building used as a human dwelling at the material time. He was further of the view that Jurio's house and the courtyard was not properly in the possession of Misri within the meaning of S. 441, Penal Code. In this connection he distinguished the right to possession from actual possession. For these reasons, Tyabji J. came to the conclusion that the offence of house-breaking was not proved.

[5] On the third and fourth points urged by Mr. Nagrani, my brother Tyabji, was of the view that the appellant had acted in the exercise of the right of private defence. This conclusion is based on a finding that no house-trespass having been proved, the prosecution witnesses Misri, Abdullah and Kassim had no right to arrest the appellant, and that the appellant was entitled to resist arrest and to defend himself; and that in the circumstance of the case the appellant had reasonable ground for apprehending that he would be grievously hurt or murdered and had, therefore, not exceeded his right.

[6] On the facts relating to this aspect of the case Tyabji J. was of the opinion that at least one and probably more of the prosecution witnesses had been armed with a hatchet in trying to apprehend the appellant. I would refer on these points to the following observations of Tyabji J.:

"Further I agree with the learned advocate for the appellant that the appellant's right of private defence in this case was not merely that of a person who was under a risk of being unlawfully arrested for the purpose of being taken forthwith to a police officer or to a police station by private persons, who intended nothing more. In considering the extent of the appellant's right, it seems to me that it would be wholly (wrong?) to overlook the realities of this case, if one were to deal with this case on that footing. Clearly that was not the purpose which Misri, Abdullah and Kassim had in mind that night, when they made the very determined effort at grave risk to themselves to catch the appellant (who was armed with a hatchet and was ready to use it), and did not desist until Misri was struck down, and Abdullah and Kassim were both injured. For reasons which I shall presently explain, it seems to me to be probable that at least one of the witnesses, and probably Misri, was armed with a hatchet, and inflicted the extremely dangerous wound upon the appellant. The passions that are aroused and the dangers that a karo runs when caught with a kari in this Province hardly need to be emphasised. In my view the appellant clearly was in great danger of suffering death or grievous hurt at the hands of Misri and his companions from the moment when they attempted to catch him, and it is clear that in spite of all that the appellant could do, by using his hatchet, he was not able to get away without receiving a very grave injury, which might easily have been fatal. It is clear that the apprehension of danger to the appellant's life continued right up to the moment when he was able to clear the wall and jump into Saleh's compound and thereby save himself . . . .

I also consider the account given to be an extremly improbable one intrinsically. If Abdullah and Kassim were able to wrest the hatchet from the appellant, after the appellant had struck down Misri, how was it that they did not then catch the appellant? I find it equally impossible to believe under these circumstances that after the hatchet was wrested from his hands, and when Abdullah and Kassim were right upon the appellant, the appellant was still able to take a knife out of the folds of his shalwar, and use it against Abdullah and Kassim who were now armed with hatchet, and that the appellant should have been able, after receiving a severe hatchet blow on the head, to get away from Abdullah and Kassim after scrambling over a 6'—10" wall. The hatchet injury received by the appellant, the injuries caused to Abdullah and Kassim, and the escape of the appellant are facts which cannot, in my view, be explained credibly on the assumption that the prosecution witnesses were unarmed, and were able to wrest the hatchet from the appellant. On the facts proved, it seems to me to be far more probable that Misri and/or his companions were also armed, that at least one of them had a hatchet, and that the injuries inflicted upon Misri, Abdullah and Kassim were all inflicted with a hatchet by the appellant. The story of the snatching of the hatchet, and of the use of a knife, in the manner alleged, appear to me to be pure inventions, calculated to show that the prosecution witnesses were unarmed, and had only struck the appellant with the appellant's own hatchet in self defence. The appellant was able to disable Misri who, I think, was the most likely person to have had a hatchet and to have struck the appellant' and was then able to keep Abdullah and Kassim sufficiently away, by striking at them with his hatchet, to be able to take an opportunity to make good his escape . . . . . That the prosecution witnesses should not like to admit that they were also armed, and had struck the appellant is exactly what one would expect. When faced with the fact that they had to explain how the appellant had received the very serious hatchet wound, which in fact was inflicted upon him, the first thing that was likely to occur to them, was to allege that they were themselves unarmed, that they had caused the injury to the appellant with the appellant's own hatchet after it had been snatched from him, and that they had done nothing more than act in self-defence, and explain the other circumstances accordingly. In order to make up a story of that kind, it was obviously necessary for them to allege that even after the hatchet had been snatched away from the appellant, the appellant had acted in such a way as to compel them to strike the appellant with the hatchet in self-defence. The story that the appellant, after his hatchet had been snatched, had taken out a knife and struck Abdullah and Kassim, had thus necessarily to be a part of the story, justifying the hatchet blow inflicted on the appellant. Once it is clear, as I think it is, that Misri and his companions also had at least one hatchet and used it, it is impossible in the circumstances of this case to say who was more likely to have struck first, the appellant or Misri or one of his companions. My conclusion, therefore, is that the version given by the prosecution witnesses cannot be accepted ; because the witnesses are unreliable and their story is improbable. The appellant had a hatchet, and also at least one of the prosecution witnesses. It seems to me to be clear that the appellant was under a reasonable apprehension that at least grievous hurt was likely to be caused to him from the moment when Misri and his companions approached him and attempted to catch him. The appellant was able to disable Misri, and keep Abdullah and Kassim at a distance only by the use of his hatchet. It is clear that he was unable even so to avoid a very serious injury being inflicted upon himself. It is clear that the appellant only wished to get away, and did get away by jumping over the wall as soon as he was able to do so. I do not think that the appellant did anything more than was necessary to save himself. There is no reason whatever to think, and it is not even suggested, that after he had disabled his opponents and assured his own safety, he had inflicted any further harm by way of retaliation. In my view, therefore, the appellant did not exceed his right."

[7] On these findings, Tyabji J. was of the opinion that the appellant is entitled to acquittal on both charges. He considered the question of a retrial on the house-breaking charge and came to the conclusion that it was inexpedient in the circumstances of the case to direct a retrial.

[8] Meher J. was of the view with regard to the first two arguments of Mr. Nagrani, that relating to the charge and also to the propriety of the conviction for house-breaking, that the charge was unexceptionable, that even though it specified that the intention of house-breaking was to cause hurt, the appellant was properly convicted on the finding that his intention was to commit adultery with Wasul, and that, on the facts, house-breaking with intention to commit adultery was proved. He was further of the view that even assuming that there was any defect in the charge or that the finding as to the intention was at variance with the specific intention imputed in the charge, there had been no prejudice to the appellant, and the defect was, therefore, immaterial.

[9] In arriving at these findings, Meher J. thought that the story told by the prosecution witnesses, except as to the presence of the three accused who were acquitted, was substantially true. He thought the witnesses Abdullah, Kassim, Wasul and Khatul were substantially corroborated by the evidence of Hamid and Waroo Sand, who in his opinion were witnesses to be relied upon. The learned Judge had no doubt that in the circumstances of the case house-breaking had actually been proved as Jurio's house and the court-yard were, at the time of the offence, in the possession of Misri.

[10] I would refer to the following observations of Meher J.:

"On that night Misri was in actual possession of the room and courtyard of Jurio's house in which there was property, and the entrance to which could only be effected through the closed door of Misri's house. I do not think it necessary to go into the case-law whether possession for the purposes of S. 441, Penal Code, may include constructive possession, for I am of the opinion for the reasons given above, that Misri was in actual possession of the whole house. The indicia of actual possession are not actual physical presence in every part of the house. Corporeal property is in a person's possession when he has such power over it that he can exclude others from it, and intends to exercise, if necessary, that power on behalf of himself or some other person.

In the present case, the entrance to the portion of the building known as Jurio's house was closed at night by closing from inside the door of the court-yard of Misri's house. Assuming, however, for argument that Misri was not in possession of Jurio's house, still the act of the appellant would amount to house-trespass, even though Jurio's daughter was away on that night. It is not necessary to constitute trespass into a house used as human dwelling that on that particular night it must have been used as a human dwelling. Can it be said that house-trespass cannot be committed in a house because the owner has locked it and gone to a hill station for two months, or because a landlord has not been able to find a tenant after the last tenant left. In R. v. Kirham (quoted in Russel on Crimes, p. 748, Edn. 9) it was held that the offence of stealing in a dwelling house had been committed, although the owner and family had left six months before, having left furniture and intending to return.

A point is made by the learned advocate for the appellant about a vernacular word used by only one witness (the woman Wasul) in referring to Jurio's house as "phital" which may mean deserted or in ruins. The learned Judge translated it as "Jurio's unoccupied house." I have no doubt that the learned Judge, whose mother tongue is Sindhi, understood correctly what the witness stated and translated it correctly. The other witnesses and the tapedar have referred to it as unoccupied. It is true that a dilapidated house which is not used as a human dwelling nor for the custody of property would not come under the definition of S. 442, Penal Code. The mashirnama shows that in Jurio's courtyard, one foot from the scene of offence where there was a pool of blood, there was a cot on which there were blood stains; three paces from there was the entrance to the hall of Jurio's house in which there were one cradle, one box and other household things, and in the inside room there were jars and a jar stand. Can it be said that this was house not used as a human dwelling or even a place for the custody of property? Would theft of any of these articles not amount to theft in a building used as a human dwelling or a place for the custody of property within the meaning of S. 380, Penal Code because the legal owner, Jurio's daughter, was away that night, though the building was in the actual possession of Misri, and the entrance to it was closed from inside by Misri's people.

In the case reported in 54 Mad. 515,[1] it was held that the offence of criminal trespass may be committed even when the person in possession of the property is absent, provided that the entrance into the property is done with intent to do any of the acts mentioned in the section. In that the learned Judge stated: "Can it be pretended, if a man in Madras locks his house and goes for a walk to the beach and comes back a few minutes later, that anyone in his absence in circumstances from which an intention to annoy may be otherwise drawn cannot be guilty of criminal trespass because he was absent? The proposition has only to be stated to show how absurd the result would be if that were the law."

A similar view has been held by the Oudh Chief Court, 35 Cr. L. J. 964.[2] In the Full Bench case in I. L. R. (1938) 19 Lah. 462[3] where the facts were that at night time the accused unchained the outer door of the courtyard of M's house and was passing through it in order to reach the adjoining house occupied by a married woman K (with whom he had intimacy) with the object of committing adultery with her when he was seen by M's wife who raised an alarm and he was arrested in M's courtyard, it was held that he was guilty of lurking house trespass. On that case, the learned Judges observed: "The section (of criminal trespass) means that if a person enters upon property with intent to commit an offence on that property or any other property, or with respect to a person who is, or is not, in possession of the property entered upon, he is guilty under it."

As regards the argument that the intent specified in the charge "to cause hurt, etc.," is not proved, it may be that the Committing Magistrate framed the charge thus because he did not feel sure whether the entry into the house was in order to commit theft or adultery, but he framed the charge thus because the intention of the accused that could be inferred from his acts in going armed with a hatchet and knife and causing injuries to Misri, Abdulla and Kassim left it in no doubt that he did intend to cause hurt. The intent has to be judged from a man's acts and there may be a two-fold intent. Can it be said that a burglar who enters a house at night armed with a loaded pistol does not intend to cause hurt because his motive is only to commit theft and because he may even wish to avoid coming across the occupant, though he is prepared to use the pistol only if confronted? In Russel on Crimes, it is stated at page 756 (Edn. 9). "If the indictment charges a burglary with intent to commit felony, it will be supported by evidence of a felony actually committed. And in all cases where a felony has actually been committed, it is enough to allege the commission of it; as that is sufficient evidence of the intention." It might be mentioned here that S. 441, Penal Code also makes it an offence if a person "having lawfully entered into or upon such property, unlawfully remains there with intent thereby to intimidate, insult or annoy any such person or with intent to commit an offence" so that it would appear that the primary motive with which a person enters upon property in the possession of another is not the only one to be taken into consideration for the purposes of S. 441.

In this case the appellant, who must have known that it was a risky thing to enter into some one's house to commit adultery with a married woman, went armed with a hatchet and knife prepared to cause hurt, if necessary. There was an intent to cause hurt, and he did actually murder Misri as soon as Misri (who had no weapon) reached him. The intent specified in the charge has, therefore, been proved. Intention is to be distinguished from "motive" or "desire" but assuming for argument that for the purposes of S. 441, Penal Code, the law will only take into consideration the primary intent, the evidence on record clearly proves that the primary intent was to commit adultery with a married woman. Clearly he did not break into the house at dead of night armed with a hatchet merely to say, "How do you do?" to Wasul with whom he had contracted intimacy; obviously he intended to commit adultery and not merely to meet her. All the witnesses have referred to Wasul as Phatu's wife. Phatu, husband of Wasul, has been examined and has stated that Wasul is his wife and has three children by her. There is nothing in his cross-examination or in the cross-examination of the other witnesses to suggest that Wasul was not lawfully married to Phatu. The application (Ex. 12) relied upon by the defence purported to have been made by Wasul, was not proved to have the thumb impression of Wasul, and was produced not from the custody of the District Magistrate to whom the application purports to be made. It is a piece of paper having no evidentiary value and should not have been admitted in evidence without proof. The principal charge against the appellant was that of murder and it was not necessary in this case for the prosecution to examine as witnesses the priest who officiated at the marriage or other persons who attended the marriage of Wasul to prove the marriage. Nor has the appellant been prejudiced in any way by the omission to state in the charge "with intent to commit adultery with Wasu." Section 537, Criminal P. C., cures any error or omission in the charge which has not in fact occasioned a failure of justice.

In the case reported in 22 Cal. 391[4] the facts were that the accused was found at night in the room of the complainant in which he and his wife were sleeping. Upon being detected, the accused was subjected to severe treatment but did not utter a word of protestation of innocence. In the charge the criminal intention alleged was that of committing theft, but the Magistrate found that the complainant had suppressed some facts, and that the intention was to commit adultery. It was urged in the High Court that such intention was not specified in the charge nor specifically proved. The High Court upheld the conviction and held that the contention was unsupportable for even if it had been necessary to specify the intention in the charge, it would have to be shown that the omission had occasioned a failure of justice, that though it was not certain what the precise intention of the accused was, it was clear that it must have been with one or other of the intents specified in S. 441, Penal Code, that it was impossible to suppose that the trespass could have been committed with any innocent intention, and that it must have been committed with the intention of committing some offence. In that case the learned Judge observed :

Though the prosecution must prove the existence of someone or more of the intentions mentioned in S. 441, Penal Code, the proof need not be direct, that is, by the confession of the accused, showing that his intention was one of those mentioned in the section, or by the evidence of witnesses proving that he admitted to them that such was his intention. It will be enough if it is proved like any other fact (and the existence of intention is a fact) by the evidence of conduct and surrounding circumstances.

In a Madras case also 12 Cr. L. J. 453[5] it was held that it is sufficient if evidence leaves no reasonable doubt that the accused wanted to commit an offence. It is not necessary for the Magistrate to find what specific offence the accused wanted to commit. In the present case, it is impossible to say that that appellant was prejudiced in his defence by the omission in the charge about intention to commit adultery. The appellant's defence was not that he had innocently trespassed into the house in a fit of somnambulism or for any purpose other than that which the character and circumstances of his acts suggest. His defence was that he wanted to meet Wasul, but before he went to that house, Wasul's relations fought with him in the street, and while fighting he and they fell in the house of Misri and Misri received a blow with the hatchet from someone."

Meher J. accepted the finding of the learned Sessions Judge that there was an attempt by Misri and his companions who were all unarmed to exercise the right to arrest an armed intruder who in their presence was committing the offence of house-breaking by night. In arriving at this conclusion Meher J. referred to the provisions of S. 105, Evidence Act, and emphasised that the appellant had not pleaded the right of private defence, but had denied striking Misri. He was, therefore, in the result, of opinion that the conviction on all counts should be sustained.

[11] I will now proceed to deal with the first point, that the charge having specified that house breaking was in order to the committing of the offence of causing hurt, the appellant could not be properly convicted of house-breaking with the intention of committing adultery.

[12] The first head of the charge appears to involve a combination of offences under Ss. 457 and 458, Penal Code. It is of an offence under S. 457 with the addition that it states that the accused had made preparations for causing hurt which comes within the purview of S. 458, Penal Code.

[13] To establish any form of criminal trespass, it must be shown that entry upon the property in possession of another is with one of the intentions specified in S. 441, Penal Code, that is to say, an intention to commit an offence or to intimidate, insult or annoy any person in possession of such property. The offence under S. 457 is merely an aggravated form of house-treapass or house-breaking by night and the intent must be the committing of an offence punishable with imprisonment. The offence under S. 458 is an aggravated form of the offences referred to in Ss. 452 and 455, Penal Code, house-trespass and lurking house-trespass or house-breaking, in each case after preparation for hurt or wrongful restraint.

[14] For offences under Ss. 452, 455 and 458, Penal Code, the initial intention need not necessarily be that of committing an offence; it may be one of the other intentions specified in S. 441, Penal Code. In this case, however, the prosecution have elected to frame a charge involving an offence under S. 457, Penal Code, and have in terms specified the intention of committing an offence punishable with imprisonment, to wit, that of causing hurt.

[15] A charge is defined in 28 Cal. 434[6] at p. 437 as "a precise formulation of the specific accusation made against a person, who is entitled to know its nature at the very earliest stage."

[16] Chapter XIX, Criminal P. C., relates to charges. Sections 221 to 232 cover matters relating to the form of the charge and also include provisions as to the alteration of charges and the effect of material errors and omissions. Sections 233 to 240 relate to the joinder of charges and provide for such matters as the conviction for an offence not charged and for a minor offence not charged and for a minor offence included in the offence charged.

[16a] In Chap. XLV which relates to irregular proceedings, is to be found S. 537 which, subject to the provisions of the Code therein before contained, cures an error, omission or irregularity in inter alia a charge, when such error, omission or irregularity has not in fact occasioned a failure of justice.

[17] These various provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure contemplate that there shall be a charge for every distinct offence and that it shall be formulated with precision; that the precise charge framed is to be tried, and tried separately, (S. 233), except in the cases mentioned in Ss. 234 to 236 and S. 239; that where there is an imperfect charge or an erroneous charge, or where no charge has been framed, the Court may amend or add to the existing charge or frame a charge at any time before the judgment or in a case of a trial by jury before the verdict, or in a case of a trial by assessors upto the delivery of the assessor's opinion, but not thereafter. (Sections 226-231); that apart from a case of an erroneous or imperfect charge, or where no charge has been framed the defect is curable, an accused may only be convicted upon the precise charge framed and no other, except in the cases provided for in Ss. 237 and 238, Criminal P. C.; and that no mere errors or omissions may vitiate a charge, unless they are material in the sense that prejudice has been caused. (Sections 225, 232, 537.) In the trial of a criminal case, it is obviously not permissible to resort to procedure not sanctioned by law, and, in my view, the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code, to which I made reference are exhaustive of the matters to which they relate.

[18] There is no doubt that in the present case the prosecution have failed to establish the house-breaking charge as laid against the appellant. The charge specified the offence of house-breaking by night by four armed persons with the intention of causing hurt. The finding of the Sessions Judge, upon which the conviction under S. 458 is based, is that one of the accused persons, the appellant, entered premises in the possession of Misri with intent to commit adultery. Both my learned brothers agree with this finding to the extent that the appellant had entered premises, not in his possession, with the object of having sexual intercourse with the woman, Wasul.

[19] The plain question which arises, therefore, on this aspect of the case, is whether, in the circumstances, the appellant can be convicted on the house-breaking charge, and this must be decided by reference to the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure alone. The charge as such is unexceptionable. It is based on the prosecution case as led, and fulfils the conditions as to the formulation of charges. It contains no error in the sense in which that expression is apparently used in Ss. 225, 232 and 537, Criminal P. C. The error referred to in these sections must, it appears to me, relate to the allegations of the prosecution upon which the charge is founded, and there cannot, I think, be said to be an "error" in a charge because the evidence for the prosecution is subsequently at the trial found to be false or insufficient to establish the charge. The sense in which the word "error" is used in S. 225 in relation to the particulars of the offence is shown by illustration (d) to that section which reads:

"A is charged with the murder of Khoda Bakhsh on 21st January 1882. In fact, the murdered person's name was Haider Bakhsh and the date of the murder was 20th January 1882. A was never charged with any murder but one, and had heard the inquiry before the Magistrate, which referred exclusively to the case of Haidar Bakhsh. The Court may infer from these facts that A was not misled, and that the error in the charge was immaterial."

[20] The reference in this illustration to the enquiry before the Magistrate indicates that the error in question arose because of the failure to frame the charge in consonance with the prosecution allegations.

[21] The word "error" in Ss. 232 and 537 is, in my opinion, used in the same sense. Chapter 45 in which S. 537 is included is headed. "Of irregular proceedings." There is nothing irregular in the present proceedings by reason of the charge. I, therefore, entertain grave doubts that Ss. 225, 232 or 537, Criminal P. C. have any application to the present case, and the question does not arise for determination as to whether a failure of justice has been occasioned by any error or omission in the charge. In my view, however, were these sections applicable, there must be deemed to have occurred a failure of justice in the circumstances of the case. The question of adultery with a married woman was not in issue between the appellant and the Crown. Some of the witnesses including Phatu did incidentally mention that Wasul was the wife of Phatu, but it is manifest, in my opinion, from the trend of the trial that the point was never properly in issue. The appellant set up a liaison with Wasul but never admitted that she was a married woman, and the question of her being the wife of Phatu was never, in my view, attempted to be met by the appellant. The point would obviously have been contested had it been in issue.

[22] Another point arises in this connection. To sustain a conviction for adultery, it must be established inter alia that sexual intercourse was committed without the consent or connivance of the husband, and there is authority for saying that to sustain a conviction under S. 451, Penal Code for the offence of house-trespass with intent to commit an offence, the offence being adultery, it is necessary to show that there has been no consent or connivance on the part of the husband of the woman. I would refer, in this connection to the judgment of Sir John Edge, C. J. and Aikman J. in 19 ALL. 74.[7]

[23] In the present case, the alleged husband, Phatu, who was examined as a prosecution witness, was asked no question at all on the point of consent or connivance. According to the evidence, Wasul had with Phatu's consent stayed with her relations 3 or 4 days before the offence, but is by no means certain that she had not been away from Phatu for a longer time than this The witness Hamid stated that twenty days before the incident one Khalil (not Phatu, the woman's husband) had asked him to ask the appellant not to come to the complainant's house, and that Wasul had been intimate with the appellant for 2 or 3 years. It may possibly be the case that the husband, Phatu, did consent to or connive; at any rate, the onus as to this point was on the prosecution, and there is nothing on the record to show that Phatu was not a consenting or conniving party to this wife's liaison with the appellant. Had the prosecution sought to put in issue the question of adultery with a married woman, it would have been open to the appellant to establish consent or connivance.

[24] In circumstances such as these which arise in this case, the prosecution could not be said to have been at a disadvantage with reference to the charge. They could have applied for the framing of an additional charge or an alternative charge or an amendment of the existing charge at any time before the assessors expressed their opinion. It would be illegal, however, to amend the charge after that stage.

[25] Were I of the view, therefore, that there had been an error or omission in the charge within the purview of Ss. 225, 232 or 537, I would have no hesitation in saying that it was a material error which had prejudiced the appellant and it would presumably have been necessary under S. 232 to direct a retrial, but, in the view I take, this question does not arise and it remains for me to consider whether a conviction may follow upon the charge as framed.

[26] In the words of Professor Kenny in his well known work 'Outlines of Criminal Law' p. 468 (12th Edn.) :

"As a logical rule, the evidence should of course establish, and the conviction also be for, the actual offence stated in the count which it concerns."

There are, however, exceptions to this rule, and in India they are embodied in Ss. 237 and 238, Criminal P. C. to which I will now refer.

[27] At the outset it may be observed that Sections 237 and 238, Criminal P. C. say nothing about prejudice to the accused and the obvious implication is that no prejudice can be deemed to arise when the conditions referred to in the sections are fulfilled. They relate to cases in which the formulation of the charge is unexceptionable. For example, with reference to S. 238, when the minor offence does in fact come within the purview of the major offence charged the question of prejudice does not arise.

[28] Section 237 manifestly has no application to the present case because it is not a case of conviction for an offence other than the one for which the appellant was charged. He was charged with an offence coming within Ss. 457 and 458, Penal Code and convicted of an offence under S 458, Penal Code. Section 237, Criminal P. C. does not, I think, cover the case of a conviction for another or more aggravated form of the same offence, but for another offence. Apart from this, S. 236, Criminal P. C. to which S. 237 is related does not, generally speaking, contemplate a case where there may be a doubt as to facts, which include the facts which constitute one of the elements of the offence.

[29] Pratt J C. in 5 S. L. R. 16,[8] expressed the view that offences charged in the alternative arise out of the same delictum and are, therefore, necessarily cognate offences, and that an alternative charge cannot be framed in respect of distinct offences nor even in respect of cognate offences when the difference is one of degree, i. e. as to the intention imputed to the accused as to some circumstance of aggravation. It was further held in that case that alternative offences must be such that can reasonably be inferred from the same set of facts.

[30] Section 238, Criminal P. C. is also, I consider, inapplicable to the present case. The principle underlying S. 238 was in my view correctly stated by West J. in 11 Bom. H. C. R 240.[9] He said with reference to S. 457, Criminal P. C. analogous to the present S. 238, Criminal P. C. :

"That section applies to cases in which the charge is of an offence which consists of several particulars, a combination of some only of which constitutes a complete minor offence. The graver charge in such a case gives to the accused notice of all the circumstances going to constitute the minor one of which he may be convicted. The latter is arrived at by mere subtraction from the former. But when this is not the case, where the circumstances, embodied in the major charge, do not necessarily, and according to the definition of the offence imputed by that charge, constitute the minor offence also, the principle no longer applies, because notice of the former does not necessarily involve notice of all that constitutes the latter. The section is not intended to apply to a collateral offence."

[31] It is true that in the case before West, J. the accused had been charged with murder and had been convicted for abetment for murder, but nevertheless I consider that what he has stated is applicable in principle, and applying that principle, it seems to follow that S. 238 does not cover the present case because the circumstances embodied in the major charge under S. 458

i. e. house breaking with the intention to commit an assault do not constitute the offence of house-breaking with the intention of committing adultery. The latter is not arrived at by mere subtraction from the former.

[32] I do not consider that S. 238 has any application to a case in which the specific intent embodied in the charge is not established, but the conviction is based upon an another and altogether different intent.

[33] Section 238, Criminal P. C. has been relied upon in certain reported cases as justifying a conviction for house breaking or house-trespass where the intent specified in the charge has not been established. These include 44 Cal. 358:[10] to which more detailed reference will later be made. I would merely say at this stage that unless my view is correct, a considerable body of cases in which it has been ruled that a conviction under S. 147, Penal Code cannot be supported unless the common object of the assembly as established by the evidence agrees in essential particulars with that laid in the charge, must be deemed to have been erroneously decided.

[34] I would refer in this connection particularly to the judgment of Princep J. in 27 Cal. 990,[11] and that of Sir Lawrence Jenkins and Mookerjee J. in 36 Cal. 865.[12] In the former case, Princep J. said :

"The Sessions Judge has accordingly dismissed the appeal confirming the conviction and sentence, but on a different finding of fact from that to which the petitioners were called upon to plead and to defend themselves at the trial. The petitioners have accordingly been convicted by the appellate Court of an offence for which they have never been tried. They are consequently entitled to an acquittal."

In the latter case it was said :

"It cannot be laid down as a general proposition of law that a conviction under S. 147 cannot be supported whenever the common object, as stated in the charge, is not precisely made out. The question in each individual case is whether the common object established agrees in essential particulars with the common object as stated in the charge. In the present case, there can be no doubt that the common object, as stated in the charge, has not been substantially established."

In neither of these cases in quashing the conviction was any reference made to the curative provisions of S. 537, Criminal P. C.

[35] I will now refer to certain decisions in which this question has arisen with regard to the offence of house-breaking or house-trespass. 22 Cal. 391[4] is a case in which the accused had been arrested upon a charge under S. 456, Penal Code, the allegation being that his intention was to commit theft. In the charge framed by the Magistrate no intention was specified. The Magistrate came to the conclusion that trespass had not been committed by the accused with the intention to commit theft, but nevertheless convicted the accused. In appeal, the Sessions Judge found that the Magistrate's views were against the evidence. He upheld the conviction without finding what specifically the intention was. In revision it was contended that the conviction was bad (1) because no guilty intention was set out in the charge; (2) because no intention was proved by the evidence and (3) because no such intention was specifically found by the Sessions Judge. As to the first point, it was held that it was not necessary in the case of an offence under S. 456, Penal Code, to specify the intention and that, in any event, the provisions of S. 537, Criminal P. C. applied, and there had been no miscarriage of justice.

[36] With regard to the second contention, it was held that though it was not certain what the accused's precise intention was, it must have been one of those specified in S. 441, Penal Code. And as regards the third point, it was held that the High Court exercising jurisdiction under S. 439, Criminal P. C. would not be justified in setting aside the conviction merely because the view taken of the evidence by the lower Court is not sustainable or that some fact which ought to have been found by that Court was not found or found incorrectly. That case is one of a series in which it has been held that it was not necessary to specify the intention of the accused in a charge under S. 456, Penal Code. It was however, pointed out that a charge under S. 457, Penal Code, would be bad for want of specification of intention in the charge. It has no application to the circumstances before me because the charge here was not under S. 456 but under S. 458 and it does specify the intention. I would in passing, however, observe that I am not satisfied that in any of the offences involving criminal trespass it is not necessary to set out the intention. As I have already pointed out, the entry into premises in possession of another is not punishable, unless it is made with one of the intentions set out in S. 441, Penal Code. In other words, intention is an essential element in the offence of criminal trespass and I consider that in all cases where this is so, the charge should specify the intention.

[37] It has been stated in Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. 9, p. 134, para. 174 :

"Where any particular intent is a necessary ingredient of an offence, the intent must be stated in the indictment."

[38] Justice need never be defeated in a case in which the intention of the accused is uncertain, bearing in mind always that an accused person is the best judge of his own intentions, because, as I have already pointed out, charges may be framed in the alternative and the charge may be amended or added to at any time up to the ultimate stage of the trial. Moreover the omission to set out the intention would always be curable provided no miscarriage of justice has occurred.

[39] In 41 Cal. 743,[13] it was held that where the case against the accused is one of theft or house-breaking to commit theft, and the Magistrate finds that it has broken down, but that there is another object apparent on the evidence, it is his duty to give the accused notice of that by drawing up a charge clearly stating what it is that he is accused of doing. The accused had been charged under S. 457 and the Magistrate had convicted him under S. 456. The Calcutta High Court held the trial to have been vitiated.

[40] In 16 C. W. N. 696,[14] it was held that an accused person who was being tried on a charge under S. 457 for house-breaking with intent to commit theft, could not be convicted of a charge under S. 456, Penal Code with an object unspecified but which was obviously of having intercourse with a woman, without amendment of the original charge. In the judgment it was observed :

"We think that there can be no doubt on the authorities that the charge under S. 456 of entering the house with an object not specified but which is presumed to be criminal cannot be sustained when the person is being tried for the specific charge of theft in a dwelling-house and house-breaking with intent to commit theft. It is obvious that he must be seriously prejudiced by not knowing what really is the charge against him. Although it is not necessary under S. 456 to specify any particular offence when such particular offence is specified under S. 457 it is incompetent in our opinion, to convict of house-breaking with some other intent."

[41] In 44 Cal. 358,[10] already referred to above, the accused was tried for offences under Ss. 458 and 380, Penal Code on the allegation that he had entered the room of a widow to commit theft. He was tried summarily and he set up the defence of previous intrigue and that he had entered the room at the widow's invitation. The Court disbelieved the stories of theft and intrigue and found the entry to have been without her consent and in order to make immoral proposals to her to her annoyance. The accused was convicted under S. 456 and it was held by the High Court that the conviction was proper on the ground that S. 238, Criminal P. C. applied. It was sought to distinguish the last mentioned case, 16 C. W. N. 696,[14] but I am unable to discern any material point of difference such as to justify a different conclusion on principle. The only possible ground of distinction may be that Karali Prasad's case[10] was tried summarily and there may have been no charge although if this was so, it is difficult to see why S. 238, Criminal P. C. was invoked. One passage in the judgment, however, suggests that there was a charge because their Lordships have observed:

"We cannot consequently hold that merely because the intent imputed to the accused to sustain a conviction under S. 457 has failed, no conviction can be made under S. 458."

If there was no charge and the intent referred to was imputed in the evidence, the passage is comprehensible. If there was a charge imputing the specific intent, the passage is not comprehensible in view of the apparently irreconcilable observations which immediately follow, for their Lordships go on to say :

"We are not now concerned with the question whether a conviction under S. 457 can be sustained when the specific intent imputed to the accused is not established, but another intent is proved. We are accordingly not called upon to consider the applicability of the class of cases in which it has been ruled that a conviction under S. 147 cannot be supported unless the common object of the assembly as established by the evidence agrees in essential particulars with that laid in the charge : 36 Cal. 865[12] ; 33 Cal. 295[15] ;27 Cal. 990.[11] In that class of cases, the weighty observations in 11 Cal. 106,[16] may be borne in mind : 'an accused person is entitled to know with certainty and accuracy the exact nature of the charge brought against him and unless he has this knowledge, he must be seriously prejudiced in his defence. This is true in all cases, but it is more specially true in cases where (as in a case under S. 147) it is sought to implicate him for acts not committed by himself but by others with whom he was in company'."

Although their Lordships have relied on S. 238, Criminal P. C. there has been no discussion of the principles underlying that section.

[42] In 26 C. W. N. 344,[17] following 41 Cal. 743[13] and 16 C. W. N. 696,[14] it was held that although it cannot be laid down as a general rule that in all cases a prosecution for house-trespass with the alleged object of theft must fail if that object is not proved, when a charge has been definitely framed in which theft is alleged, the accused cannot be convicted of house-trespass with some other object without an amendment of the original charge, unless the Court is satisfied that he has not been in any way prejudiced in his defence by the omission to amend the charge.

[43] In 23 ALL. 82,[18] where on a charge under S. 457, Penal Code, it was proved that the accused entered the complainant's house in order to have sexual intercourse with a woman whom he knew was the wife of the complainant, and that he did so without the husband's consent, it was held that the conviction was proper and that it was not necessary that the complainant should bring a specific charge of adultery. It is clear from the facts of that case that the appellant admitted house-trespass with intent to commit adultery with a married woman and the facts are, therefore, not in point.

[44] In 37 ALL. 395,[19] the accused was apparently charged with having committed lurking house-trespass by night, the allegation being that he intended to commit theft. He stated that he had entered the complainant's house as he was on intimate terms with the widowed aunt of the complainant and that he had been invited to the house by her. It was not proved that the intention of the accused had been to commit theft, but he was convicted and sentenced under S. 457, Penal Code. The High Court refused to interfere with the conviction in revision on the ground that the intent with which the appellant entered upon the complainant's premises was a matter within his own knowledge, the burden of proving which lay upon him, and that having failed to establish any illegal intimacy of any kind between him and the Brahmin widow, the conviction was proper. There was no discussion in the judgment as to whether there could be a conviction in a case of house-breaking where the charge specified an intention to commit theft, which allegation had been discredited, and the decision is at variance with 16 C. W. N. 696[14] and 41 Cal. 743.[13]

[45] In A. I. R. 1920 Pat. 590,[20] it was the case against the accused that he had committed lurking house-trespass by night in order to commit theft. It was found in appeal that it was not proved that the object of the trespass was to commit theft, and the Sessions Judge altered the conviction from one under S. 457 to one under S. 456, Penal Code. The High Court set aside the conviction, Das J. making the following observations :

"It seems to me that the petitioner has really not been tried for an offence of which he has now been convicted. The case in A. I. R. 1914 Cal. 663,[13] is in point."

[46] In A. I. R. 1921 Pat. 217,[21] Jwala Prasad J. took the view that if the accused was charged under S. 457 for house-trespass with the intention to committing theft, he could be convicted under S. 456 of house-trespass with the intention of committing adultery if he was not prejudiced.

[47] Varma J. in A. I. R. 1935 Pat. 129,[22] referring to the conflict of opinion on the point, followed the case last referred to above and expressed the view that S. 238; Criminal P. C. was applicable.

[48] The decisions to which I have made reference indicate that there is no unanimity of opinion, on the point involved and, for the reasons I have already given, I am in agreement with 16 C. W. N. 696,[14] 41 Cal. 743,[13] and the other cases in which a similar view has been taken. I am, therefore, of opinion that the conviction under S. 458, Penal Code cannot be sustained.

[49] It is unnecessary in this view to consider in any detail the question as to whether the appellant's entry in the premises amounted to house-trespass or house-breaking. "Building" has not been defined in the Penal Code, but it is coupled with "tent" or "vessel" in S. 442, and is apparently used in a comprehensive sense. It was held in 22 S. L. R. 466,[23] and other cases that a courtyard annexed to living rooms, the whole being entirely surrounded by a wall constitutes a building within the meaning of S. 442, Penal Code and this seems to be a reasonable view of the matter considering the climate, conditions of life and the types of dwellings in use in India. The place in which the appellant was found seems to fulfil the conditions mentioned in 22 S. L. R. 466[23]. There were living rooms to which were annexed open courtyards each courtyard leading into the other and the whole was surrounded by a comparatively high brick or mud wall provided with a door leading to the street.

[50] It does not seem to me to make any material difference that Jurio's courtyard and living room, i. e. the particular part of the premises formerly occupied by him, were at the time of the offence unoccupied. The point is that there was one common wall round the whole premises and one common outlet to the street.

[51] It seems to me, therefore, that it cannot be said that the first charge was not sustainable because there was no house-trespass or house-breaking.

[52] In view of my finding as to the charge under S. 458, Penal Code, it is not necessary to consider the question as to whether, had there been a charge correctly specifying the intention, the evidence on record is sufficient to sustain a conviction. I do not consider the point in this form arises at all, although a consideration of the entire evidence is involved when dealing with the murder charge to which I will now direct my attention.

[53] The appellant was properly charged and tried for murder and no fault can be found with the charge under S. 302, Penal Code. It does not follow that because the house-breaking charge has failed, the murder charge need necessarily fail. It is a separate charge to be treated separately on its merits although by reason of S. 235, Criminal P. C. there has been one trial.

[54] There is no doubt that the appellant did intentionally strike Misri with an axe and caused his death and did intentionally strike Abdullah and Misri causing certain incised wounds. The question is as to whether in inflicting these injuries he was acting in the exercise of the right of private defence within the meaning of S. 96 and ancillary sections of the Indian Penal Code. It has not, and with justification, been suggested that any of the exceptions to S. 300, Penal Code apply. Under S. 105, Evidence Act, the onus lies upon the appellant to establish the existence of circumstances bringing his case within the general exception provided for in S. 96, Penal Code, but the principles underlying S. 105 are sometimes difficult of application.

[55] Before dealing with the particular facts of this case. I will make some reference to these principles. In 1935, the case in 1935 A. C. 462,[24] came up before the House of Lords and there appears in the judgment of Viscount Sankey, in regard to the burden of proof in criminal cases, the following well-known passage :

"Just as there is evidence on behalf of the prosecution so there may be evidence on behalf of the prisoner which may cause a doubt as to his guilt. In either case, he is entitled to the benefit of the doubt. But while the prosecution must prove the guilt of the prisoner, there is no such burden laid on the prisoner to prove his innocence and it is sufficient for him to raise a doubt as to his guilt; he is not bound to satisfy the jury of his innocence ..... Throughout the web of the English Criminal law one golden thread is always to be seen, that it is the duty of the prosecution to prove the prisoner's guilt subject to what I have already said as to the defence of insanity and subject also to any statutory exception. If, at the end of and on the whole of the case, there is a reasonable doubt, created by the evidence given by either the prosecution or the prisoner, as to whether the prisoner killed the deceased with a malicious intention, the prosecution has not made out the case and the prisoner is entitled to an acquittal. No matter what the charge or where the trial, the principle that the prosecution must prove the guilt of the prisoner is part of the common law of England and no attempt to whittle it down can be entertained."

[56] The effect of the decision in 1935 A. C. 462[24] in relation to S. 105, Evidence Act, has been the subject of discussion by certain High Courts in India, and in particular, has been considered by Full Benches of the Rangoon and Allahabad High Courts.

[57] In 14 Rang. 666,[25] two of the four points of reference submitted to the High Court were:

"(1) Where a person is accused of any offence and alleges the existence of circumstances which bring the case within the General Exceptions of the Indian Penal Code or within any special exception or proviso contained in any other part of the same Code, or in any law defining the offence, does S. 105, Evidence Act or any other rule of law provide that when facts prima facie constituting the offence are proved by the prosecution, and from the examination of the accused or evidence tendered by the defence in attempted discharge of the burden of proof then laid upon the accused by the said section (105), the Court has a reasonable doubt as to whether the said burden of proof has been discharged by the accused person, or as to the truth of the statement of the accused, or evidence tendered, the Court should convict the accused?

(2) Is the decision of the House of Lords in (1935) A. C. 462[24] inconsistent with the law of British India, or should it be regarded as explaining the meaning of the phrase 'the burden of proving the circumstances is upon him, and the Court shall presume the absence of such circumstances' in S. 105, Evidence Act, 1872?"

[58] The answer to the first question was found in the negative. On this point I refer to the following observations of Roberts C. J.:

"The answer to the first question is one of great importance because it involves a fundamental principle of Criminal law common to England and to British India. The main proposition may be laid down simply as follows: in all criminal cases where there is a reasonable doubt as to the guilt of an accused person at the close of the whole of the evidence the accused is entitled to be acquitted

Section 105, Evidence Act, runs thus: 'When a person is accused of any offence, the burden of proving the existence of circumstances bringing the case within any of the General Exceptions in the Indian Penal Code, or within any special exception or proviso contained in any other part of the same Code, or in any law defining the offence, is upon him, and the Court shall presume the absence of such circumstances.'

There has been in some quarters much confusion as to the meaning of the words "burden of proof." In criminal cases the burden of proof, using the phrase in its strictest sense, is always upon the prosecution and never shifts whatever the evidence may be during the progress of the case: if on a review of all the evidence the prosecution has failed to establish the guilt of the accused beyond reasonable doubt, he is entitled to be acquitted. Some references were made in the argument to a popular theory that Courts give to the accused what is known as "the benefit of the doubt;" the phrase is misleading and should be avoided in any attempt at accurate expression. The accused does not receive a benefit, nor does humanity grant him some boon dictated by the instinct of mercy in opposition to the ends of justice Where there is an element of genuine doubt then there must be an acquittal as a matter of right and not as a matter of grace or favour.

Now, it is not for the prosecution to examine all the possible defences which might be put forward on behalf of an accused person and to prove that none of them applies. In order to make this clear, S. 105, Evidence Act, says that the Court shall presume the absence of such circumstances as may bring the case within the ambit of a possible defence. But if the evidence adduced by the prosecution is itself consistent not only with the guilt of the accused but with his possible innocence, it is clear that there can be no conviction. In the same way if such evidence is consistent not with innocence but with the commission of a lesser offence than that with which the accused person is charged, it is clear that the conviction (if any) must be restricted to a conviction for such lesser offence.

In many instances little or no evidence in favour of the accused will have transpired at the end of the case for the prosecution. When this is so, then in another and quite different sense the burden of proof is cast temporarily on the accused; when sufficient proof of the commission of a crime has been adduced and the accused has been connected therewith as a guilty party, the burden of proof in the sense of introducing evidence in rebuttal of the case for the prosecution is laid upon him. If evidence is then adduced for the defence which leaves the Court in doubt as to whether the accused ought to be excused from criminal responsibility, or found guilty of a lesser offence than that with which he stands charged, then at the conclusion of all the evidence it must still be remembered that it is incumbent upon the prosecution to have proved their case. Put shortly, the test is not whether the accused has proved beyond all reasonable doubt that he comes within any exception to the Indian Penal Code, but whether in setting up his defence he has established a reasonable doubt in the case for the prosecution and has thereby earned his right to an acquittal.

By S. 106, Evidence Act, when any fact is especially within the knowledge of any person the burden of proving that fact is upon him. The burden of proof referred to here is that of introducing evidence merely and the phrase is used in the same sense as in S. 105. Section 106 does not cast any burden on an accused person to prove that no crime was committed by proving facts specially within his knowledge: nor does it warrant the conclusion that if anything is unexplained which the Court thinks the accused could explain, he ought therefore to be found guilty: 41 C. W. N. 65.[26]

I would answer the first question in the negative."

[59] As to the second point, it was held that the decision in 1935 A. C. 462[24] is in no way inconsistent with the law in British India, but that on the contrary the principles there laid down form a valuable guide to the correct interpretation of S. 105, Evidence Act.

[60] This Court in I. L. R. (1940) Kar. 249[27] (by which decision I am bound) also took the same view as to the effect of Woolmington's case.[24]

[61] In I. L. R. (1941) ALL. 843,[28] the effect of the decision in Woolmington's case[24] and its bearing upon the interpretation of S. 105, Evidence Act, came up for consideration before a Full Bench consisting of not less than 7 Judges. Four of these, including the Chief Justice, Sir Iqbal Ahmed, took the view in consonance, generally speaking, with that of the Rangoon High Court in 14 Rang 666[25] that the decision in Woolmington's case[24] is in no way inconsistent with the law in British India, and that it furnishes a valuable guide to the correct interpretation of S. 105, Evidence Act, and it was further held that, to quote a portion of the headnote:

"The burden of proving the existence of circumstances bringing the case within a general or special exception is no doubt cast upon the accused by S. 105, Evidence Act, but this does not in any way absolve the prosecution of the burden laid on it by S. 102, so far as the entire 'proceeding' is concerned. There is nothing in the Evidence Act to justify the conclusion that the failure of the accused to discharge the burden under S. 105 is tantamount to 'disproof' of the existence of circumstances bringing the case within the general or special exception pleaded: all that can be said is that those circumstances are 'not proved.' The presumption laid down in S. 105 might come into play, but it does not follow therefrom that the accused must be convicted even when the reasonable doubt under the plea of the right of private defence or any other general or special exception pervades the whole case. The Court at the end of the trial, has still to see whether having regard to the entire evidence and the circumstances of the case, the charge is proved beyond reasonable doubt."

[63] There is no doubt that the principles stated in 14 Rang. 666[25] and by the majority of the Court in I. L. R. (1941) ALL 843[28] apply also to the situation which arises when the accused denies in toto the actual act alleged and does not, whether owing to ignorance or bad advice, plead the exception. Whether the exception is actually pleaded is immaterial so long as on all the facts of the case, including admissions made by the prosecution witnesses, there is reasonable doubt as to the guilt of the accused at the close of the whole evidence. I refer on this point to the observations of Dunkley J. in the Rangoon case.

[64] Being guided, therefore, in the interpretation of S. 105, Evidence Act by the decision in 1935 A. C. 462[24] and accepting the principles stated in 14 Rang. 66,[25] and the majority view in I. L. R. (1941) ALL. 843,[28] the question befor me resolves itself into whether upon a consideration of the evidence as a whole, a reasonable doubt has been created as to whether the appellant is entitled to the benefit of the general exception as to the right of private defence; or put another way, whether the prosecution case is itself consistent not only with the guilt of the accused but with his possible innocence.

[65] In this connection a difficulty immediately arises because the eye-witness evidence for the prosecution is deliberately false in material particulars and cannot, in my view, be relied upon in any respect. All the eye-witnesses support the story that there were four armed intruders whom they have named. The reluctance to conceal the true reason for the appellant's visit is comprehensible though not justifiable but that all these witnesses were prepared to inculpate three innocent persons in a case involving a long term of imprisonment is some indication of the extent to which they were prepared to prevaricate. The learned Sessions Judge found that this part of the story was untrue, but he and Meher J. were prepared nevertheless to place some reliance on the evidence of these eye witnesses as to the circumstances in which Misri was assaulted. Meher J. thought that whereas Abdulla, Kassim, Wasul and Khatul might be said to be interested and false witnesses, their evidence received corroboration from two 'independent' witnesses, Hamid and Waru Sand. Hamid's evidence is, to my mind, manifestly false, because he supports the story of the four armed intruders. He is also shown in cross-examination to be interested in Abdulla. He admits that his mistress Saran is Abdulla's father's sister. The evidence of Waru Sand carries the case no further because he is not an eye witness He is said to have come after the appellant had escaped over the wall.

[66] Certain admissions made by Wasul her mother Khatul and the witness Hamid, indicate, beyond any doubt, that Wasul had been carrying on an intrigue for a considerable time with the appellant and that this must have been known to the prosecution witnesses. Wasul admitted that she used to meet the appellant secretly in Jurio's unocccupied house. Hamid has admitted that some 20 days before the incident, he had been asked to remonstrate with Waroo. Although the prosecution witnesses have sought to make out that the woman Wasul had only been living in Misri's house for 2 or 3 days before the incident, it appears to be the case that she had been living there much longer.

[67] The story put forward by Wasul and corroborated by the prosecution witnesses, as to the circumstances in which Wasul went to the outer courtyard to talk to the appellant on the night in question, and how the crying of her child aroused her mother, is dubious. Perhaps the most material point on this aspect of the case was however, as to whether Misri and/or his companions were armed, and I am unable to accept the prosecution evidence that they were unarmed. I am in entire agreement with Tyabji J. that at least one of the witnesses must have been armed with a hatchet when they went to apprehend the appellant. Apart from the cogent reasons put forward by Tyabji J., I cannot conceive that in the conditions prevailing in Sind Mahomedan rustics would set out unarmed to apprehend intruders at night. Axes and lathis are readily available and are invariably taken up on such occasions. The fact is that the appellant did receive a blow from a hatchet and the witnesses have put forward the specious story that this was caused by the appellant's own hatchet which Abdulla was able to seize from him.

[68] In my opinion, the relations of Wasul knowing of her intrigue with appellant, in all probability either lay in wait for him or discovered during the course of the night that Wasul was with him, and three of them, Misri, an able-bodied man of 40 and Abdullah and Kassim, both young men, made a concerted onslaught upon the appellant who was then in the outer courtyard. There is no doubt that they knew it was the appellant they were attempting to attack or seize and that his presence was only accountable by the fact that he had come there to meet Wasul.

[69] With regard to what actually took place in the ensuing struggle therefore, I consider that no reliance of any kind can be placed upon the oral testimony of the prosecution witnesses. Not only is the whole fabric of their story entirely untrustworthy as indicated above but material details as to what occurred during the struggle are, I consider, false as, for instance, the alleged seizing of appellant's hatchet by Abdulla and the appellant then extracting a knife from the folds of his trousers and the use of it on the witnesses. None of them are proved to have sustained any stab wounds which is the normal type of wound inflicted by a knife. If Abdulla were standing by appellant armed with appellant's hatchet he would obviously neither permit appellant to fumble in his trousers for a penknife nor indeed permit him to escape over the wall at all, and particularly so when the appellant is said already to have seriously injured and knocked down Misri.

[70] The only safe and reasonable course in this case is to fall back upon the circumstantial evidence and to decide whether upon it the conviction can be sustained. The circumstances are that there was a pool of blood in Jurio's courtyard and blood on the wall. Of the four men engaged in the struggle, two of them, the appellant and Misri, had sustained serious incised injuries which in the opinion of the medical officer had been caused by a weapon such as a hatchet. The appellant received a cut on the left parietal region cutting the bone, and in the opinion of the doctor, it was sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. Misri in addition to a serious injury on the neck, which caused his death, had a simple cut. Kassim had a simple incised injury and small contusion. Abdulla had one simple incised injury.

[71] Assuming as I do that Misri's party knowing of the presence of appellant in the outer courtyard (for the purposes of his intrigue with Wasul) advanced to seize or attack him, at least one of them being armed with a hatchet and that it was the appellant's desire to escape, the circumstances indicate nothing more than that a fight ensued in which each side sustained injuries. There is nothing to show who struck the first blow. The circumstances are consistent with the appellant having been struck first and then by use of his hatchet having extracted himself from a very dangerous position, and escaped. In the circumstances I consider the appellant had reasonable cause to apprehend death.

[72] It is true that there is no right of private defence under the Penal Code against an act which is not in itself an offence under the Code, and if the facts had indicated that Misri and his companions were entitled to arrest the appellant, and in attempting to do so, did not resort to more force than was necessary, the case might be different.

[73] But I am not prepared in the particular circumstances of this case to hold that Misri and his companions had the right to arrest the appellant under S. 59, Criminal P. C. For the reasons already given, I have no doubt that they were aware of the appellant's liaison with Wasul and that the appellant was in the habit of meeting Wasul secretly in Jurio's abandoned premises. Assuming the marriage of Phatu and Wasul to have been proved, I am not prepared also to assume without some evidence that Wasul was carrying on her intrigue without the knowledge or assent of Phatu. The prosecution, as I have siad, examined Phatu but failed to ask him any question on the point of consent or connivance. The right of arresting appellant has certainly not been established by the prosecution and it cannot be assumed in this case. This is not a case where there could have been any uncertainty in the minds of the prosecution witnesses as to appellant's intention in entering Jurio's courtyard. They have elected to conceal the true state of affairs and even when the facts of Wasul's intrigue were elicited in cross-examination, the prosecution made no attempt to establish that it was without Phatu's consent.

[74] I consider, however, that even assuming Misri and his companions had the right to arrest the appellant, the facts are consistent with an attack upon him in which they resorted to excessive violence justifying the appellant in apprehending that he would be killed. The appellant was doing what to the knowledge of the prosecution witnesses he had often done before—meet Wasul in Jurio's court-yard—when he was set upon by three of them one of whom at least was armed with an axe.

[75] This case might have assumed an entirely different aspect had it been possible to place some reliance on the testimony of the eye-witnesses as to the circumstances in which Misri and the appellant were injured and in particular as to who struck the first blow. But I wish again to emphasise that the whole fabric of the prosecution case is false and I am not prepared to sustain the conviction for murder because of appellant's failure to establish any more circumstances in his favour than those already on record. In my view the murder charge must fail on the ground that the guilt of the appellant has not been established beyond all reasonable doubt.

[76] Concurring, therefore, with Tyabji, J., I acquit the appellant of all the offences with which he has been charged and direct that he be set at liberty.

The Municipality of Kotri — Applicant v. Abdul Rahman M. Qureshi —Opponent.

Criminal Revn. Appln. No. 55 of 1947, Decided on 26-5-1947, to revise order of First Class Magistrate, Kotri, D/ -16-12-1946.

(a) Bombay District Municipal Act (3 [III] of 1901), S. 77 (2)—Terminal tax levied by Kotri (Sind) Municipality in pursuance of S. 59 (1) (xi) — Non-payment of, if punishable under S. 77 (2).

When the Bombay District Municipal Act, 1901, came into force, the word "octroi" meant octroi as defined or described in cl. (iv) of S. 59 (1), and the same meaning must be given to word "octroi" in S. 77 (2) of the Act. The word "octroi" used in the rules and bye-laws framed by the Kotri Municipality in Sind in describing terminal tax levied in pursuance of cl. (xi) of S. 59 (1) is nothing more than a tax as described in S. 73 (1) (v), Bombay Municipal Boroughs Act, 1925. The word "octroi" used in the description of terminal tax is an octroi which is not liable to be refunded, on the other hand, "octroi" referred to in cl. (iv) of S. 59 is clearly refundable. The connotation of the word "octroi" in the description of terminal tax in the rules and bye-laws of the Kotri Municipality is something quite different from the connotation of the word octroi used in cl. (iv) of S. 59 (1). It is a recognised canon of construction that where in an enactment a word is defined or described, it must have the same meaning wherever it occurs in the enactment. Manifestly the word "octroi" used in rules and bye-laws of the Kotri Municipality in Sind has not the same meaning as it has in cl. (iv) of S. 59 (1), Bombay District Municipal Act. Consequently, what is punishable under S. 77 (2), Bombay District Municipal Act is the non-payment of octroi with the particular intention described in sub-s. (2) of S. 77, and not the non-payment of terminal tax which the Kotri Municipality is competent to lewy: 22 Bom. 843; 13 A. I. R. 1926 Bom. 231 ; 26 A. I. R. 1939 All. 736, Disting.

Thadani J.—This is an application by the Kotri Municipality under the provisions of Ss. 435 and 439, Criminal P. C. to set aside the judgment of acquittal passed by the learned Mukhtiarkar and first class Magistrate of Kotri in which he acquitted one Mr. Abdul Rahman, M. Qureshi, proprietor of Messrs. Qureshi and Company, of an offence punishable under the provsions of S. 77 (2), Bombay District Municipal Act, 1901.

[2] The case of the Kotri Municipality is that on 17-7-1946, Mr. A. M. Qureshi drove, or caused to be driven a lorry containing some iron plates to Hyderabad Sind without paying terminal tax to the Naka Munshi of the Kotri Municipality. The defence of Mr. Qureshi was that he holds a license from the Provincial Government to run a lorry service between Karachi and Hyderabad Sind on the Provincial road called the National Highway; the district boundary marks show that it is a P. W. D. road; the goods carried on the lorry on the day in question were not intended for consumption or use within the limits of the Kotri Municipality; the Kotri Municipality was therefore not entitled to charge a terminal tax in respect of them.

[3] We think Mr. Qureshi was properly acquitted by the trying Magistrate, and we see no reason to interfere with the acquittal.

[4] Section 77 (2), Bombay District Municipal Act reads as follows:

"If goods passing into a municipal district are liable to the payment of octroi, then every person who, with the intention to defraud the municipality, causes or abets the introduction of, or himself introduces or attempts to introduce within the octroi limits of the said district, any such goods upon which payment of the octroi due on such introduction has neither been made nor tendered, shall be punishable with fine which may extend to ten times the value of such octroi or to fifty rupees, whichever may be greater."

The learned Magistrate took the view that the goods had not passed into the limits of the Kotri Municipality, and that, in any case, the goods carried by Mr. Qureshi were not liable to octroi within the meaning of s. 59 (iv), Bombay District Municipal Act, 1901.

[5] Section 59 is contained in Chap 7, Bombay District Municipal Act, which deals with "Municipal Taxation." The permissible taxes are enumerated in cls. (i) to (xi) on goods or animals or both brought within the Kotri Municipal limits for consumption or use therein. Clause (xi) is a residuary clause which empowers a municipality to levy "any other tax to the nature and object of which the approval of the Governor in Council and/or the Governor-General in Council shall have been obtained prior to the selection contemplated in sub-cl. (i), of cl. (a) of S. 60."

[6] The manner in which octroi and tolls are levied is laid down in the same chapter in S. 75 of the Act. Section 75 says:

"Every municipality, when submitting for sanction a proposal for the imposition of octroi, shall submit therewith for sanction a draft of bye-laws for the purposes of cl. (j) of S. 48, after observing the requirements of subss. (2) and (3), of that section."

Clause (j) of S. 48 (1), of the Act, which occurs in Chap 4, deals with "Rules and Bye-laws" in the matter of:

"Fixing octroi limits and stations; providing for the exhibition of tables of octroi; regulating, subject to any general or special orders which the Governor-General in Council may make in this behalf, the system under which refunds are to be made on account thereof, when the animals or goods on which the octroi has been paid, or articles manufactured wholly or in part from such animals or goods, are again exported, and the custody or storage of animals or goods declared not to be intended for use or consumption within the Municipal district; and prescribing a period of limitation after which no claim for refund of octroi shall be entertained, and the minimum amount for which any claim to refund may be made."

We think when the Bombay District Municipal Act, 1901, came into force, the word 'octroi' meant octroi as defined or described in cl. (iv) of S. 59 (1), and the same meaning must be given to the word "octroi" in S. 77 (2) of the Act.

[7] It is contended on behalf of the Kotri Municipality that as in its Rules and Bye-laws, sanctioned under the Commissioner-in-Sind's No. 507-G, dated 8-1-1924, terminal tax has been described as octroi levied on certain articles shown in Sch. A imported within the terminal tax limits of the Kotri Municipality, such octroi not being liable to be refunded on the export of such goods from such limits, the word "octroi" referred to in the description of terminal tax in the Rules and Bye-laws must be interpreted in a wide sense and is not to be restricted to the "octroi" contemplated in cl. (iv) of S. 59 (1), Bombay District Municipal Act. We do not think it can be properly contended that the word "octroi" used in describing terminal tax levied in pursuance of cl. (xi) of S. 59, can have the same meaning as the word "octroi" in cl. (iv) of S. 59. It is important to bear in mind that the word "octroi" used in the description of terminal tax is an octroi which is not liable to be refunded. On the other hand, "octroi" referred to in cl. (iv) of S. 59, is clearly refundable. We think the connotation of the word "octroi" in the description of terminal tax in the Rules and Bye-laws of the Kotri Municipality is something quite different from the connotation of the word octroi used in cl. (iv), of S. 59 (1). It is a recognised canon of construction that where in an enactment a word is defined or described, it must have the same meaning wherever it occurs in the enactment. Manifestly the word "octroi" used in the Rules and Bye-laws of the Kotri Municipality has not the same meaning as it has in cl. (iv) of S. 59 (1), Bombay District Municipal Act of 1901.

[8] It is to be remarked that the Bombay District Municipal Act of 1901, nowhere defines terminal tax. The Bombay Municipal Boroughs Act, 1925, however, not only defines or describes "octroi," but also describes terminal tax. Section 73, cl. (1) (iv), Bombay Municipal Boroughs

Act, 1925, deals with "Municipal Taxation-Imposition of Taxes," and cl. (v), mentions, among other taxes, "a terminal tax on goods imported or exported from the terminal tax limits." We think the word "octroi" used in the Rules and Bye laws framed by the Kotri Municipality in describing terminal tax, is nothing more than a tax as described in S. 73 (1) (iv), Bombay Municipal Boroughs Act, 1925.

[9] It follows, then, that what is punishable under S. 77 (2), Bombay District Municipal Act is the non-payment of octroi with the particular intention described in sub-s. (2) of S. 77, and not the non-payment of terminal tax. We wish to make it plain that we do not accept the view that the Kotri Municipality has no power to levy terminal tax on the goods in question. All we wish to say is that a terminal tax is not an octroi within the meaning of cl. (iv) of S. 59 (1), or sub-s. (2) of S. 77, Bombay District Municipal Act, 1901. In other words while the Kotri Municipality is competent to levy a terminal tax, its evasion is not punishable under the provisions of S. 77 (2), Bombay District Municipal Act, 1901.

[10] Mr. Kishinchand Bijlani for the Kotri Municipality has relied upon a decision of the Bombay High Court in 22 Bom. 843.[1] But the facts of that case are entirely different to the facts before us. The learned Judges of the Bombay High Court were dealing with S. 84, Bombay District Municipal Act (6 [VI] of 1873). It has not been shown to us that S. 84 corresponds to S. 59 (1) (iv) or S. 77 (2), Bombay District Municipal Act, 1901. In any case, the learned Judges of the Bombay High Court were dealing with the interpretation of the word "imported" and not the validity or otherwise of a conviction under S. 77 (2), Bombay District Municipal Act, 1901.

[11] In 50 Bom. 174,[2] another case upon which Mr. Bijlani has relied, the Kalyan Municipality had made bye-laws under the powers given to it by S. 48 (1) (j), Bombay District Municipal Act, 1901, providing that persons taking goods liable to octroi through its limits should deposit the amount of the octroi at the in-going Naka, obtain the certificate of exit at the out-going Naka, and claim refund of the amount paid; the lorry-driver, in each case, instead of going through the above procedure, drove the lorry straight past both Nakas without stopping. We do not see how this case is of any assistance to the Kotri Municipality.

[12] In I. L. R. (1940) ALL. 4[3] the learned Judges of the Allahabad High Court were not dealing with the interpretation of any section corresponding to S. 77 (2), Bombay District Municipal Act, 1901.

[13] There is yet another aspect of the case which is fatal to the success of the revision application. Before a person can be convicted of an offence under S. 77 (2), Bombay District Municipal Act, 1901, it must be proved that the person importing the goods has intention to defraud the Municipality. In this case, intention to defraud was not even alleged. Indeed, it appears that Mr. Qureshi raised, what we consider to be, a bona fide contention in refusing to pay the terminal tax demanded. There was nothing in the conduct of Mr. Qureshi to warrant any inference of intention to defraud the Kotri Municipality. On any view of the case, we think Mr. Qureshi was properly acquitted, and we decline to interfere with the acquittal. The revision application is accordingly dismissed.

Emperor v. Hansraj Dindayal

Criminal Ref No. 54 of 1947, Decided on 3-7-1947 made by Addl. Dist. Magistrate, Karachi.

(a) Criminal P. C. (1893), S. 264 — "Substance of the evidence"—Meaning of—Substance how to be recorded — Object of section.

In order to comply with the provisions of S 264, the judgment must contain a sufficient record of the substance of the evidence given in the case. The expression "substance of the evidence" implies a judicious selection or precis of that part of the evidence which was really material. The question whether the substance of the evidence had been sufficiently recorded in a particular case must depend upon a consideration of the nature and relevance of the various pieces of evidence given in the case, regard being had to the issue raised or involved in the particular case. Section 264 does not require the Magistrate to embody in the judgment a gist of the evidence of each witness examined separately irrespective of the character, quality and relevance of such evidence. A judgment could not be regarded as sufficiently embodying the substance of the evidence, unless the substance was so recorded that there was no likelihood of any prejudice resulting to the accused, when exercising his right of appeal. An omission to refer in a reasonably sufficient manner to any piece of evidence which was of a character likely to affect the decision of any important point involved in the case might easily be an omission likely to prejudice the accused : Case law referred. [Para 16]

Per Constantine J. — The object of S. 264 is that an appellate Court should be able to form its opinion on the merits of the case and for that purpose have before it the Magistrate's statement of the substance of the evidence. To extract the substance of a witness's evidence is a matter of discretion and judgment on the part of the Magistrate, having regard to the points at issue, and if the substance can be expressed briefly and during the course of a reasoned argument, so much the better. But Magistrates should remember that to state the effect of the evidence is not the same thing as to state the substance, though the distinction may be fine. It is undesirable that an appellate Court should be reduced to ascertaining the substance by inference. [Para 24]

Fatechhand Assudomal, Advocate-General —for the Crown.

Balkishen H. Lulla — for the Accused.

Tyabji C. J. — This is a reference made by the Additional District Magistrate of Karachi who has forwarded to this Court the record and proceedings of a case, Crown v. Hansraj and two others, in which the Second Additional City Magistrate of Karachi convicted the three accused, Hansraj and Madanlal under S. 6 read with S. 13, Hoarding and Profiteering (Prevention) Ordinance (XXXV [35] of 1943), and Naraindas under the same sections read with S. 109, Penal Code, and sentenced Hansraj and Madanlal to pay a fine of Rs. 1000 each, and Naraindas to pay a fine of Rs. 250. The Additional District Magistrate recommends that the sentences, which he described as ludicrously inadequate, be enhanced.

[2] The facts which the Magistrate held to be proved were as follows: Hansraj and Madanlal are the proprietors of a shop run in the name of Ramesh & Co., in the Gordhandas Cloth Market in Karachi. Naraindas is a broker. One Ghulamnabi made a complaint to the Enforcement Officer that Ramesh & Co., were demanding a very unreasonable price for certain pieces of woolen goods. On this the Enforcement Officer proposed a trap and decided to utilize Ghulamnabi as a bogus purchaser. Ghulamnabi was to purchase 6 lengths of cloth, each measuring 14 yards, which were offered at Rs. 36 per yard. Rupees 3,030 in marked currency notes of Rs. 100 and Rs. 10 were handed over to Ghulamnabi. After this, according to an appointment, the broker Naraindas met Ghulamnabi, and accompanied him to the shop in question. The Sub-Inspector (Enforcement Branch) along with two mashirs followed Ghulamnabi and Naraindas to the shop in a gharry. There Ghulamnabi in the presence of the Sub-Inspector and the mashirs, who were also at the shop, picked out certain samples from a sample book and then a boy went and brought four pieces according to the samples. The price of three pieces sold at Rs. 36 per yard was Rs. 1575 and the price of the fourth piece sold at Rs. 33 was Rs. 231. The pieces were handed over to Ghulamnabi who paid Rs. 1806 using the marked notes. At this stage, the Sub-Inspector came up with the mashirs, secured the cloth and the money and the piece of paper on which the price was calculated, and prepared a mashirnama. Both Hansraj and Madanlal were present at the shop at the time when this transaction took place, as also Naraindas, who had come with Ghulamnabi. Immediately after preparing the mashirnama the Sub-Inspector searched the houses of the three accused, made a report and obtained sanction to prosecute the three men.

[3] During the investigation, it became clear that three out of the four pieces sold to Ghulamnabi corresponded with samples, Exs. F/1, F/2 and F/3, which were in the sample book, Ex. F, kept at the shop, which had the number 10,287 imprinted on it and showed the name of the importers, Messrs. Dhan Mohan of Amritsar. The invoice, Ex. N, was secured from Messrs Dadabhoy Hormusji & Sons, the clearing agents of the importers at Karachi. The invoice showed that 8 cases containing woolen textiles bearing serial Nos. 10,282 to 10,289 had been imported, and that the sample book, Ex. F, secured at the shop related to the contents of the case No. 10,287. The eight cases imported were shown in the manifest, Ex. 5, bearing No. 574/2, dated 21-12-1945 and Index No. 151 dated 29-12-1945. The Landing Cost Certificate regarding the goods contained in the eight cases, Ex. J, was issued, by the Assistant Director of Civil Supplies on 31-1-1946, and fixed the importers' price at Rs. 14-13-3 per yard, and the retail price at Rs. 16-10-11 per yard. Rupees 36 per yard was, therefore, an unreasonable consideration charged for these goods, very much in excess of the 20 per cent. allowed.

[4] The main evidence in the case given on behalf of the Crown was that of the Enforcement Officer, Mr. Nagarwalla, the bogus purchaser, Ghulamnabi, the mashir Gobindram and the investigating Sub-Inspector Autarsingh. The case was summarily tried by the Magistrate.

[5] On behalf of the defence two main contentions were set up : (1) that in this case there was no sale to Ghulamnabi at all; the accused contended that some time before the date of the alleged sale, Ghulamnabi had pledged the four pieces in question with the accused Hansraj and Madanlal and obtained Rs. 1800 from them on the pledge, accused Naraindas acting as broker, and that, at the time of the alleged sale, Ghulamnabi only paid the amount due by him on the pledge, and was allowed to take away the pieces which had been pledged; (2) that the Landing Cost Certificate, EX. J, did not relate to the goods which, it was alleged, had been sold to Ghulamnabi.

[6] Two defence witnesses were examined by the accused in support of the pledge story. In addition one Shanti Saroop the proprietor of Messrs Dhan Mohan of Amritsar, who had imported the goods, was also examined as a defence witness.

[7] The learned Magistrate found the pledge story set up by the accused to be clearly false, and he held that the goods sold to Ghulamnabi had been clearly identified as goods covered by the Certificate, EX. J.

[8] As this is a matter in which an enhancement of the sentences has been proposed, it is open to Mr. Lulla, who appears on behalf of the three opponents, to show that their convictions were not proper.

[9] Mr. Lulla made some sort of an attempt to argue that the evidence actually led before the learned Magistrate did not justify the convictions, but he was unable to support his argument by anything which could be regarded as a good reason. His main contention before us, however, was that the judgment of the learned Magistrate was not a judgment which satisfied the provisions of S. 264, Criminal P. C. He contended that the learned Magistrate had failed in this case to embody the substance of the evidence given, and that this failure had caused grave prejudice to the accused. He contended that the three opponents should therefore be acquitted, or, in any case that a retrial should be ordered.

[10] Section 264, Criminal P. C., clearly requires a Magistrate trying summarily a case in which an appeal lies, such as the present, before passing sentence, to record a judgment embodying the substance of the evidence, and it also lays down that such judgment shall be the only record in such a case.

[11] Mr. Lulla referred us to a number of cases in which it was emphasised that unless the substance of the evidence was sufficiently embodied in the judgment, grave prejudice was likely to be caused to the person convicted when exercising his right of appeal, including 19 S.L.R. 136;[1] A. I. R. 1936 Sind 40;[2] A. I. R. 1927 Mad. 298;[3] and A. I. R. 1928 Mad. 597;[4] and he particularly relied on A. I. R. 1924 Oudh. 167;[5] and 30 Bom. L. R. 954[6], contending that unless the substance of the evidence of every witness examined was stated in the judgment, there would be failure to comply with S. 264, Criminal P. C.

[12] In A. I. R. 1924 Oudh 167,[5] it was stated:

"Section 264, Criminal P. C., requires that in such a case the Magistrate shall write a judgment embodying the substance of the evidence on both sides. It is clear from a perusal of the judgment that the Magistrate has not complied with this requirement. As regards the prosecution witnesses, all he says is that the witnesses support the statement of the complainant. This is hardly sufficient. The record should at least have shown how the witnesses came to be on the spot and how much of the affair they saw. When I come to the defence evidence, the record is still more insufficient. It appears that thirteen witnesses were examined in support of the cases set up by the defence. The learned Magistrate gives no indication of what these witnesses said and the only remark he makes about them is that the statement of the witnesses examined by Muhammad is very conflicting and he does not believe them."

[13] In 30 Bom. L. R. 954[6] it was stated:

"This section (S. 264, Criminal P. C.) says that the Bench shall record a judgment embodying the substance of the evidence, whereas the judgment contains no reference to any evidence that may have been given on behalf of the Municipality, such as that of the complainant, D. M. Daru; and although there is a reference to certain defence evidence the substance of it is not stated, but merely the fact that the Bench consider it unreliable. No doubt, it can be inferred that evidence was given in support of the accused's statement that the connection had been made some twelve years ago. But the provisions of S. 264 required that the substance should be plainly stated and not that the Court should be driven to inferences in order to find out the substance of the evidence."

On the facts of the case the learned Judges found that the failure of the Magistrate to state the substance of the evidence sufficiently had, in fact, caused prejudice to the accused, because it prevented a proper disposal of the appeal which the accused was entitled to make. They said:

"The appellate Court should know the substance of the evidence that had been given, so as to be in a position to decide the appeal on the merits, and it is not proper to decide the appeal in the way the District Magistrate has done, viz., he merely finds that the Bench did address themselves with due diligence to the question of fact that arose, and says he was not, at that stage, prepared to question the discretion which they exercised in determining it. To decide the appeal required more than a refusal to interfere with a discretion; it required a decision on the evidence as to the facts proved. In our opinion this is a case where there is an omission to comply with the provisions of S. 264, which cannot be deemed immaterial under S. 537 of the Criminal P. C."

[14] The learned Judges then expressed their opinion that if the accused had not died, they would have ordered a retrial.

[15] The learned Advocate-General referred us to a case, later than the one cited by Mr. Lulla, of the Oudh Chief Court, 30 Cr. L. J. 557,[7] in which Raza, J. dealing with a contention similar to that of Mr. Lulla before us stated:

"I think there is no force in the first ground. I have read the judgment of the learned City Magistrate carefully. It contains the substance of the evidence which is quite sufficient for convicting the accused persons under S. 4, Gambling Act. It is true that the judgment does not contain the substance of every separate deposition; but the Magistrate was not bound to record the substance of every deposition under S. 264, Criminal P. C.

He had to state generally what was the substance of the witnesses' evidence and this he had done. I agree that the substance of the evidence is a matter distinct from the facts which may be considered as proved by the evidence I agree also that the substance of the evidence should be recorded in such a manner that a superior Court acting in appeal or revision may be in a position to judge that there were sufficient materials before the Magistrate to support the conviction. The evidence might profitably have been summarized more fully in this case, but it cannot be said that the judgment is not a legal judgment when it contains the substance of the evidence which I think is sufficient for convicting the accused persons under S. 4, Gambling Act."

[16] It is clear that the judgment must contain a sufficient record of the substance of the evidence given in the case. The meaning of the expression "substance of the evidence" is, we think reasonably clear and implies a judicious selection or precis of that part of the evidence which was really material. The question whether the substance of the evidence had been sufficiently recorded in a particular case must, we think, depend upon a consideration of the nature and relevance of the various pieces of evidence given in the case, regard being had to the issues raised or involved in the particular case. Section 264 does not require the Magistrate to embody in the judgment a gist of the evidence of each witness examined separately irrespective of the character, quality and relevance of such evidence. A judgment could not be regarded as sufficiently embodying the substance of the evidence, unless the substance was so recorded that there was no likelihood of any prejudice resulting to the accused, when exercising his right of appeal. An omission to refer in a reasonably sufficient manner to any piece of evidence which was of a character likely to affect the decision of any important point involved in the case might easily be an omission likely to prejudice the accused.

[17] Mr. Lulla referred us to the following passage in the judgment of the learned Magistrate: "The two defence witnesses are obviously lying and it was easy to see that they were friends of the accused who had come to oblige him" and he argued that this was all that was stated with regard to the substance of the evidence of the two defence witnesses referred to, and he contended that these defence witnesses had given important evidence, and that the failure of the learned Magistrate to state what these witnesses had stated, had made it impossible for him to show us that they had been wrongly disbelieved. This passage, however, occurs at the very end of a long paragraph in which the learned Magistrate discussed the evidence with regard to the contention of the accused that, as a matter of fact, the accused had not sold the goods to Ghulamnabi, but had only returned goods which had been pledged with them on payment of the amount advanced. This paragraph is as follows:

"On the evidence before me I have no hesitation in holding the sale proved and in holding the pledge story to be absolutely false. In the first instance there is no reason why Ghulam Nabi should lie and falsely implicate accused 3. He had no motive against the accused. Accused Naraindas has not alleged any reason. On the contrary according to him (Naraindas) Ghulam Nabi was his (Naraindas's) permanent customer. Accused Madanlal states that Ghulam Nabi was set up by some rival businessmen. Who these businessmen were and why they wanted to implicate the accused and why had Ghulam Nabi consented to do a dirty turn to the accused is not vouchsafed by Madanlal. According to accused Hansraj the reason was quite different. They (the accused) were importers of lining cloth and Ghulam Nabi being a tailor wanted them to increase his lining quota and as they had refused to do so, Ghulam Nabi had framed them. This allegation of Hansraj remains an allegation. In fact beyond the bare word of each of the accused — each giving a different reason — there is nothing to show that Ghualm Nabi wanted to frame the accused. The story of the pledge is inherently improbable and false. That the accused Madanlal on his own would part with a sum of Rs. 1800 for cloth worth about less than Rs. 800 (for the accused being dealer could gauge the approximate price) and without taking any writing from Ghulam Nabi is against the normal routine of a businessman and cannot possibly be true specially when Ghulam Nabi was dissatisfied with them on the issue of the lining cloth quota It is false to say that while, as stated by Hansraj, Hansraj reported to Mr. Pearce about the conduct of Ghulam Nabi, Hansraj's brother and partner would fork out Rs. 1800 to the same Ghulam Nabi and that without a writing. And again if it was a pledge then there was no reason for Naraindas to go after Ghulam Nabi and take him to Ramesh & Co., and be present at the time of the redemption when he was not to benefit at all by the transaction. For does he not state that he was not to get any commission on the alleged pledge transaction, nor did he get any? The conduct of Naraindas in seeking out Ghulam Nabi in Camp and taking him to Ramesh & Co., is absolutely incompatible with the pledge stuff. The two defence witnesses are obviously lying and it was easy to see that they were friends of the accused who had come to oblige him."

[18] It appears to us to be very clearly indicated that the two defence witnesses gave evidence to show that the goods were pledged with the accused by Ghulam Nabi in their presence. Taking the entire paragrah as it is, we think it cannot be reasonably urged that there was no clear indication of what these defence witnesses had stated. The reasons given by the learned Magistrate for disbelieving this pledge story, and the evidence of the two defence witnesses who deposed to it, have been very fully stated. Under the circumstances, we do not think that there is any justification for holding that the substance of the evidence of the two defence witnesses was so insufficiently stated as to prejudice the accused, although, it would have been more satisfactory and more in accordance with S. 264 if the substance of their substance had been summarised.

[19] Shanti Saroop, the proprietor of the firm of Dhan Mohan of Amritsar, was also examined as a witness for the defence. It is clear that he was examined in connection with the defence contention that the goods sold to Gulam Nabi had not been sufficiently identified as goods covered by Ex. J, the certificate of landed cost. The learned Magistrate referred to the evidence of Shanti Saroop in his judgment in this manner:

"I may here refer to the evidence of D. W. Shanti Saroop of Messrs. Dhan Mohan of Amritsar (the importers). His evidence is of a general character and cannot detract from the documentary evidence placing the 3 pieces sold in the said manifest and therefore covered by the landed cost certificate."

It is true that what Shanti Saroop actually stated was not set out in the judgment. It is, however, clear that he gave evidence, which the Magistrate described as 'evidence of a general character,' which did not in any manner affect the documentary evidence given particularly with regard to the actual goods in question, as goods covered by Ex. J. Here again, we think that although it may, in one sense, be true to say that the learned Magistrate did not state what Shanti Saroop had actually said, the nature and character of that evidence which was the real thing which mattered, was sufficiently indicated, and the reasons of the Magistrate for not regarding that evidence as in any way affecting the strength of the Crown evidence regarding the identity of the goods, have been so stated that there is no justification whatever for saying that the accused have in any manner been prejudiced. It is not necessary to know anything more about Shanti Saroop's evidence to decide whether the learned Magistrate's conclusion was or was not correct on the point under consideration. We do not think that the Magistrate was bound to give any further details of the evidence which, on the very face of it, was of a character which made it worthless and even irrelevant, although it would have been better if he had done so.

[20] We are therefore of the opinion that this is not one of those cases where prejudice had or was likely to have been caused. We are satisfied that on all the points which actually arose for consideration the Magistrate had very fully stated the substance of the relevant evidence in the case, and we find no difficulty here in disposing of this matter on merits, in arriving at our conclusions on all the points which matter after hearing this matter in the manner in which an appeal ought to be heard and disposed of.

[21] We are satisfied that the three opponents were properly convicted. It is clear that the three opponents were concerned in carrying out a transaction, which was clearly an offence under the Hoarding and Profiteering (Prevention) Ordinance. This Court has always taken a serious view of such offences. We therefore agree with the learned Additional District Magistrate that the sentences passed in this case were inadequate.

[22] We therefore maintain the fines imposed on the three opponents, and the sentences imposed in default of payment of the fines; and in addition we sentence each of the three opponents to suffer rigorous imprisonment for three months. The opponents may be placed in "B" Class

[23] Constantine J. — I agree, and would add the following remarks.

[24] The object of S. 264, Criminal P. C. is that an appellate Court should be able to form its own opinion on the merits of the case and for that purpose have before it the Magistrate's statement of the substance of the evidence. To extract the substance of a witness's evidence is a matter of discretion and judgment on the part of the Magistrate, having regard to the points at issue, and if the substance can be expressed briefly and during the course of a reasoned argument, so much the better. But Magistrates should remember that to state the effect of the evidence is not the same thing as to state the substance, though the distinction may be fine; it is undesirable that an appellate Court should be reduced to ascertaining the substance by inference. In this case the learned Magistrate might well have indicated the substance of the evidence of the three witnesses in question more directly and less allusively. But the context shews that the first two supported a story of pledge which on the face of it was untenable and it is clear from the Magistrate's statement that the evidence of the third witness had no bearing on the actual documents which provided cogent proof of the cost of the goods in question. No prejudice has been caused to the appellants.

Hiromal s/o Chuharmal — Appellant v. Emperor.

Criminal Appeal No. 58 of 1947, Decided on 15-5-1947, from order of Addl. Sessions Judge, Nawabshah.

(a) Penal Code (1860), S. 302—Grave provocation —Accused's father while under influence of drink abusing accused and his sisters — Accused on several occasions remonstrated with liquor shopkeeper and asked him not to supply liquor to his father—Shopkeeper paying no attention to accused's request—On accused's father coming home drunk, accused rushing to the shopkeeper with knife and causing injuries which resulted in death of shopkeeper Accused held acted under grave provocation when he struck the shopkeeper. [Para 4]

(b) Bombay Children Act (13 [XIII] of 1924), S. 22 — Murder case — Age of accused hardly 15 years—Sentence of transportation held illegal.

In a murder case, where the age of the accused when he committed the offence was hardly fifteen years, it was held that the sentence of transportation for life passed upon him was illegal as he clearly came within the definition of "child" as given in the Act.

[Paras 8, 9]

Khemchand R. F. Khilnani — for Appellant.

Parmanand Kundanmal, Public Prosecutor of Sind — for the Crown.

O'Sullivan J. — This is a very unusual case. A boy called Hiromal, a resident of Sinjhoro in the Nawabshah District, has been convicted of an offence under S. 302, Penal Code, by the Additional Sessions Judge of Nawabshah and sentenced to transportation for life. He has appealed and the appeal, which was admitted to regular hearing, has come before us today.

[2] The prosecution case was that the father of the appellant was addicted to drink which he obtained at the shop of a liquor licensee called Sirumal who sold country liquor and intoxicating drugs in Sinjhoro town. It is the prosecution case that Hiromal was upset at the manner in which his father used to drink liquor at Sirumal's shop and come home drunk and that he remonstrated with Sirumal for selling his father drink. On the evening of 31-8-1946, the appellant's father came home the worse for liquor which had been supplied at Sirumal's shop. This exasperated the boy who seized a knife and went to Sirumal's shop and remonstrated with him, and when Sirumal expressed an intention to continue to supply liquor to appellant's father, the appellant struck him with the knife inflicting four injuries in consequence of which Sirumal died.

[3] The facts of the case are not in dispute because the prosecution has relied upon a confession made by the appellant as being both true and voluntary. This confession reads as follows:

"My father started drinking liquor before my birth. My mother used to prevent him from doing so. My father was partner of Seth Perumal. He left that place. Thereafter when we opened our own shop in Deh 39 my father again began to drink liquor. For the last about two years I had been telling Seth Sirumal Gutawalla not to sell liquor to my father because my father used to abuse me and my sisters after getting drunk. With all that Sirumal used to give him liquor. Yesterday at about 5-0 p. m. I told Sirumal that he was still not keeping back from giving liquor to my father and he replied that he would not keep back from doing so and would give liquor to him. Again at 7 p. m., my father came home drunk and he abused my sisters. I could not bear that. I picked up the knife in my house and I went to Sirumal's shop and asked him "you have again given liquor to my father". He replied that he would give him liquor. I got annoyed at it and attacked him with knife and caused him four injuries. I then ran away. Thereafter the Police came at night and searched for me. I went running to the pond of water and put off my clothes and threw the same in it. I passed the night at the pond and came home in the morning. I put on other clothes in the house. Then the police came and took me away. Every one is self-respecting."

[4] This confession is supported by the first information report in the case and we have no doubt that the facts are true. The circumstances reveal a good deal of the family life of this unfortunate boy who has in a graphic language described the state of affairs caused in the family by the unfortunate habits of his father. He has said that his father started drinking before he was born and continued to do so and apparently ruined his business. When he used to come in drunk he was very unpleasant to the appellant's sisters. It is manifest that this state of affairs must have continued for a good many years and the effect on the mind of the growing youth developing a sense of responsibility who was no doubt endeavouring to keep the family together can be well imagined. Finally the climax came on the night in question when the father came home drunk and abused, as the confession stated, the appellant's sisters. The appellant had already asked Sirumal not to supply liquor to his father. There is no reason to disbelieve that when the appellant remonstrated with Sirumal on the night in question, Sirumal replied that he would continue to supply liquor to the appellant's father. Sirumal was of course entitled to supply liquor to whomsoever he liked, but a wise liquor licensee has undoubtedly a wide scope to refuse more liquor to a customer than that customer can stand, and there is no doubt that the appellant, as the learned Judge has found, acted under grave provocation when he struck Sirumal.

[5] The facts, as has been stated, are very unusual. Sirumal himself in a dying declaration has admitted that the appellant asked him not to supply liquor to his father, but said that he said to the appellant that he was required to supply liquor to everybody according to law. He added however that if the appellant wished he would give instructions that liquor should not be supplied to the appellant's father. It is difficult to believe that Sirumal did take up this attitude. Had he done so, it is probable that the tragedy would never have occurred.

[6] The learned Sessions Judge has taken no pains whatever to ascertain the real age of the appellant. There was upon the record a certificate from a medical officer stating that he was about 16 years of age. But the learned Sessions Judge dealt with him on the assumption that he was about 17 to 19 years of age and sentenced him to transportation for life. He is undergoing the sentence in an ordinary jail for adults.

[7] The Sessions Judge, we consider, should have exercised considerably more care in the matter The appellant was before him and it should have been obvious to him as indeed it is obvious to us when we now have the appellant before us, that he is a youth of 15 or 16 years of age. He was probably 15 or little over at the time of the offence.

[8] When this appeal was admitted, we directed that the medical officer of the jail in which he was then undergoing sentence should report as to his age, and we have his report before us to the effect that he is now about 15 or 16 years of age. The offence took place nearly a year ago in last August and it is safe to assume that he was then hardly 15 years of age. He looks to us now barely 16 In the circumstances, the sentence was illegal. The learned Judge made no reference to the Bombay Children Act, 13 (XIII) of 1924 which clearly applied to the case, as the appellant comes within the definition of "young person" in that Act, being a person who is 14 years of age and upwards but under the age of 16.

[9] This being so, the sentence of transportation for life is illegal, and it was a most unfortunate sight to see this 'young person" led into this Court in heavy shackles on his legs and handcuffs, a most inappropriate treatment for a boy of this age.

[10] Section 26, Bombay Children Act, refers to detention in the case of serious crime committed by children and young persons and as to the action to be taken when in the opinion of the Court the nature of the offence is so serious that no punishment which the Act provides, is sufficient

[11] The crime with which the appellant has been properly convicted is murder which is a very serious offence, but in the very unusual and extraordinary circumstances of the case, we consider that the appellant may appropriately be dealt with under S. 27, and that it is unnecessary to take action under S. 26.

[12] We consider that the interests of justice would be entirely met by making an order under S. 27 (b) of the Act, remitting the appellant to the care of two fit adult persons from the town where he resides who will execute a bond to be responsible for his good behaviour and conduct. We think such a course would completely meet this case. On all the facts before us, we have good reason to believe that this boy is responsible for the welfare of his family, his sense of responsibility having been developed by the unfortunate habits of his father. There is nothing whatever to suggest that he had been of the least trouble hitherto and on our observation of him he appears to be a normal, pleasant looking youth.

[13] Mr. Khemchand Khilnani who appears for him states that he would procure in this Court the attendance of two respectable and responsible residents of Sinjhoro to stand surety in this behalf. He undertakes that they should attend before this Court on 21-5-1947.

[14] In the meantime we direct that the appellant be returned to the custody of the jail with directions to the Superintendent that the shackles should be removed from his person and intimation also to the effect that immediately the sureties are accepted he should be released. He may in the meantime be treated in an appropriate manner, as one who is about to be released on the execution of the necessary bonds. The Superintendent of the jail is directed to produce the appellant in this Court on 21-5-1947.

[15] 21 5-1947. — In accordance with our judgment of 15 5 1947 two sureties, Tirathamal son of Lilaram and Sitaldas s/o Mulchand have been produced. They have filed affidavits as to their status and both are willing to execute the necessary bonds under S 27 (b), Bombay Children Act, to be responsible for the good behaviour of the appellant. The learned Advocate General submits they are fit persons to be accepted as sureties and we agree.

[16] We therefore direct these two persons to execute bonds under S. 27 (b) in the sum of Rs 5000 each to be responsible for the good behaviour of the appellant Hiromal s/o Chuharmal for a period of three years. The appellant is to be released and handed over to the sureties on execution of the bonds.

N.S.D. Order accordingly.

Criminal Revn. Appln. No. 63 of 1947, Decided on 26 5-1947, from judgment of Constantine J., D/- 28-1-1947.

(a) Evidence Act (1872), S. 30 — 'Same offence', meaning of—Offences under S. 457/330 and S. 411, Penal Code are not same.

The words 'same offence' in S. 30 have not the same meaning as the words 'offences of the same kind' in S. 234, Criminal P. C They mean identical offence.

Hence where two persons are jointly tried, one for an offence under S. 457/380, Penal Code and the other for an offence under S. 411, Penal Code a confession made by one accused person cannot be taken into consideration against the other who has been implicated in the confession. The fact that both were challaned under S. 457/380, Penal Code is immaterial.

Kimatrai Bhojraj—for Applicant.

Parmanand Kundanmal, Public Prosecutor for Sind—for the Crown.

Thadani J. — This is a revision application against the decision of Constantine J., in which he upheld the conviction and sentence passed on the applicant under S. 411, Penal Code by the First Additional City Magistrate, Karachi.

[2] On the night of 2-10-1946, a theft occurred on the ground floor of a building occupied by the firm of Kewalram Topandas, carrying on business near Boulton Market. The firm employed a chowkidar called Ramsingh who used to live on one of the upper floors of the building. On the night in question, after closing the office for the day, Ramsingh retired upstairs to sleep and kept the key of the office under his pillow. When he woke up at 5-30 A. M., he found the key missing. He went downstairs and found the office door and safe open. Immediately he informed his masters and one of the partners called Kishinchand lodged a report at the Karachi City Police Station at 8 in the morning.

[3] In the evening one Lilo went to Chandiram, a partner in the firm of Kewalram Topandas and told him that some property had been kept with him by the applicant. Chandiram sent for his partner Kishinchand, and the two partners accompanied by the police went to Lilo's room where they found a bedding and a bag In the bag were found some gold, cash and ornaments, the property of the firm of Kewalram Topandas. Lilo also handed to the police a sum of Rs. 515 which he said had been given to him by the applicant.

[4] In the course of the investigation the police searched the room of one Chanderbhan who handed over to the police a large sum of money belonging to the firm of Kewalram Topandas and made a confession to the City Magistrate, Karachi. On the completion of the investigation, the applicant and Chanderbhan were sent up for trial. Chanderbhan was charged and convicted under S. 457/380, Penal Code and the applicant under S. 411, Penal Code. Chanderbhan did not appeal.

[5] At the hearing of the appeal, it was brought to the notice of Constantine J. that Chanderbhan's confession had not been exhibited. The Public Prosecutor requested the Judge to call for the confession and admit it under the provisions of S. 428, Criminal P. C., as Chanderbhan in his confession had implicated the appellant. The Learned Judge acceded to the request of the Public Prosecutor.

[6] It is contended on behalf of the applicant that Chanderbhan's confession should not have been brought on the record under the provisions of S. 428, Criminal P. C., firstly, because the applicant and Chanderbhan were not tried for the same offence as required by S. 30, Evidence Act, and secondly, because the applicant was never questioned about it, when he was examined under the provisions of S. 342, Criminal P. C. and that if the confession of Chanderbhan cannot be taken into consideration against the applicant, the only evidence in the case is the uncorroborated evidence of Lilo, an accomplice.

[7] We think the learned Judge was in error in admitting the confession on the facts of this case.

[8] There appears to be consensus of judicial opinion that where two persons are jointly tried, one for an offence under S. 457, Penal Code and the other for an offence under S. 411, Penal Code, a confession made by one accused person cannot be taken into consideration against the other who has been implicated in the confession. The words "same offence," we think, must mean identical offence, and not offence of the same kind. For instance, S. 234, Criminal P. C. refers to offences of the same kind, and offences of the same kind are defined in sub-s. (2) of S. 234, Criminal P. C. as offences punishable with the same amount of punishment under the same section of the Indian Penal Code or any special or local law. We think that the words "same offence" in S. 30, Evidence Act have not the same meaning as the words "offences of the same kind" in S. 234, Criminal P. C.

[9] It was pointed out to us by the learned Advocate-General that the challan against the applicant and Chanderbhan was sent to the Magistrate under S. 457/380, Penal Code. We do not think that makes any difference in view of the fact that the charge against the applicant was framed under S. 411, Penal Code, and he was convicted of receiving stolen property with the requisite knowledge.

[10] The second objection raised on behalf of the applicant, to the effect that before the confession of Chanderbhan could be taken into consideration against the applicant, the applicant should have been questioned about it must also prevail. We would accordingly exclude the confession of Chanderbhan from our consideration.

[11] The only other point which requires consideration is whether the evidence of Lilo is the evidence of an accomplice. We have scrutinized the evidence of Lilo, and have come to the conclusion that his evidence is not to be regarded as the evidence of an accomplice. The learned City Magistrate who tried the case has carefully considered the evidence of Lilo and come to the conclusion that Lilo's evidence is not to be regarded as the evidence of an accomplice. Lilo's evidence is that the applicant came to him at 7 A. M. on the morning of 3-10-1946 with a bedding and asked him to keep it, and that he would call for it later; the applicant came at 2 P. M. and asked for the key of his room; he gave it to him; the applicant then returned to him Rs. 15 which he had borrowed from him and gave him a sum of Rs. 500 for safe custody; in the evening he read in the "Hindu Sansar" about this theft; he went to Kishinchand, and Kishinchand and Chandiram made a report to the police.

[12] It is true Lilo says that when he kept the property given to him by the applicant, he knew from the applicant himself that the property was stolen. But a receiver of stolen property is not necessarily an accomplice of a thief. Lilo apparently was a friend of the applicant, but when he read about the theft in "Hindu Sansar," he appears to have realised the danger of withholding information, and so he decided to disclose the information to Chandiram, one of the partners in the firm. We think the subsequent conduct of Lilo was the conduct of an honest man. It was he who informed the police that the applicant had given him Rs. 515. We agree with the view of the Courts below that Lilo's evidence is not to be regarded as the evidence of an accomplice. Lilo's evidence having been believed by both the Courts, it is not for us to reject his evidence in revision. We accordingly decline to interfere in revision and dismiss the application.

TYABJI C. J. AND MEHAR J.

Criminal Appeal No. 57 of 1947, Decided on 22-7-1947, against judgment of 2nd Addl. Sessions Judge, Hyderabad, D/- 15-2-1947.

(a) Penal Code (1860), S. 220—Offence under, by head-constables held proved — Fact that accused were acting under instructions of superior officers should be considered on question of sentence—Sentence reduced.

The accused who were police head-constables were charged under S. 220, Penal Code. The charge against them was that they went to the house of the complainant with about 10 policemen and handcuffed him and also handcuffed his servant with the same pair of handcuffs and tied a rope round their wrist, maliciously and knowing that they were acting contrary to law. The motive for the offence suggested in the complaint was that the complainant who was the manager of a cinema had refused free passes to police officers and the accused had acted under the instigation of those officers. The defence case was that a certain boy had made a complaint against the cinema manager under Ss. 147, 323, Penal Code, and the accused had gone to investigate the matter and having been obstructed and driven out by the manager and his staff they had to arrest the complainant. The evidence showed that no investigation was made and when the complainant asked as to why he was being arrested he was asked to shut up. The report made by the boy was found to be substantially false and inspired by same police officers. The accused were convicted and sentenced to two years' rigorous imprisonment:

Held, that the accused had no right to arrest the complainant either Ss. 157 (1), 54 or S. 46, Criminal P.C. They were, therefore, rightly convicted. [Para 18]

Held further that the circumstances that the accused were acting under the instructions of their superior officers and that they were not known before to the complainant and had no particular personal grudge of their own against him should be taken into consideration on the question of sentence. One year's rigorous imprisonment would meet the ends of justice. [Para 19]

(b) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 46—Confinement and rough handling are not permissible when there is submission to custody.

Under first part of S. 46, confinement and rough handling are not permissible and are contrary to law, when the person to be arrested submits to the custody, that is, to the restraint which is necessary and sufficient for the purposes of the arrest. An arrest is completed when there is a submission to the custody by word or action. Every police officer, knows that in making an arrest he must not subject the person to be arrested to unnecessary brutality, and that he cannot confine any person unless the person refuses to submit to custody and it becomes necessary to confine him, and cl. 2 of S. 46 is brought into application. [Para 28]

Annotation. —('46-Com.) Criminal P. C., S. 46, N 2.

B. H. Lulla (for No. 1) and A. K. Brohi (for No 2) — for Appellants.

Fatehchand Assudomal Advocate-General of Sind — for the Crown.

Mehar J.—The appellants in this case have been convicted by the learned Second Additional Sessions Judge, Hyderabad of the offence under S. 220, Penal Code, and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for two years. The appellant Pandhikhan was further convicted under S. 323, Penal Code, and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 100 or in default to undergo rigorous imprisonment for one month.

[2] The appellants were Head Constables of the City Police Station, Hyderabad. The charge against them was that on the evening of 29-5-1944 they went to the house of the complainant Gori Shanker, handcuffed and tied with a rope Gori Shanker and his servant Kassim, maliciously and knowing that they were acting contrary to law. The appellant Pandhikhan was further charged with having caused an injury to Gori Shanker with a dandi while handcuffing him.

[3] The complainant, Gori Shanker was the Manager of Empire Talkies, Hyderabad. The prosecution case, as set out in the evidence of Gori Shanker, is that on that evening at about 8-30 P M. he was with his friends whom he had invited to dinner and that they were preparing to take meals when there was a knock at the door.

The two appellants with a number of policemen entered. He found his Makrani servant Kassim handcuffed and a rope had been tied round his wrist. Pandhikhan put the same handcuffs round Gori Shanker's hand, i.e., his hand and Kassim's hand were joined by the same pair of handcuffs. The appellant, Jan Mahomed then tied the rope round his wrist. The complainant enquired why he was being arrested, Pandhikhan said that he could enquire at the police station and struck him with a dandi on the middle finger of the right hand. His guests Kalidas and Shantidas also asked the policemen what it was about and offered to stand surety; but they were told that he would be taken to the police station. After some time, witnesses Tikamdas, Assudomal and others came up and talked with the police officers. After about an hour Sub Inspector Kanayalal came and got the handcuffs removed.

[4] The motive for the offence suggested in the complainant's evidence was that he had not been giving free passes to police officers. Gori Shanker has stated that at first he used to give free passes to the police, but that after the second week of May 1944, when the picture 'kismat' was running and there was a lot of rush, he asked Inspector, Samuel Ghani and Sub-Inspector Sahibdino, who had been taking free passes from him, to wait till the rush days were over. On one evening Mr. Samuel Ghani sent four men whom he refused admission. He rang up Mr. Samuel Ghani and told him that the rush was there still. Then these men went away. On 21 5-1944 he refused admission to five men who had been sent by Mr. Samuel Ghani. He also refused admission to some men sent by Sub-Inspector Sahibdino. On 21st May Sahibdino had brought four men and given them seats without his knowledge. But he refused to admit them and they paid for the tickets.

[5] It might be mentioned here that one Kishno had on the evening of 29-5-1944 sought admission to the first show on a ticket which had expired, having been of the previous evening, and was refused admission. This Kishno went to the City Police Station accompanied by one Hiranand, brother of Sub-Inspector Kanayalal, who is a defence witness in the case, and Pribhdas, a police Munshi. There he made a complaint under Ss. 147 and 323, Penal Code, against Gori Shanker, the Manager of the Cinema, Kassim, Brijlal, Kishinchand and two other persons whose names were not given. In that complaint he alleged that he had purchased a first class ticket and sought admission, but he was not admitted by the gate-keeper Kassim, that Kassim dragged him to the Manager that the Manager slapped him and called 5 or 6 of his servants, who gave him fist blows and kicks on the arms and the back, saying that he had brought an expired ticket. It is the prosecution case that this false complaint was inspired by the police, who used it as a handle to disgrace the complainant by handcuffing him and tying him with a rope along with his Makrani servant and trying to march him through the town of Hyderabad to the police station and thus to teach him a lesson for refusing free passes to superior police officers and their friends.

[6] The appellant, Pandhikhan stated before the Committing Magistrate that he did not handcuff the complainant and Kassim, that he came to the Cinema at about 9-45 P. M. with Sub-Inspector Kanayalal, and that he and Kanayalal got the handcuffs removed. In the Sessions Court, he further elaborated his statement and said that constable Harpaldas of the City Police station came to him and said that he had gone with Head Constable Jan Mahomed to investigate a complaint filed by Kishno against Gori Shanker and others, that they did not permit the investigation and there was a quarrel and that Gori Shanker and Kassim were handcuffed at the orders of Jan Mahomed. He further said that they had been beaten and their clothes torn. He (the appellant Pandhikhan) rang up Sub-Inspector Kanayalal and Kanayalal said that he would be coming. He then went to the cinema where Kanayalal asked him to remove the handcuffs. He got the key from Jan Mahomed and removed the handcuffs and released Gori Shanker and Kassim. Thereafter Kanayalal asked Jan Mahomed to proceed with the investigation.

[7] The appellant Jan Mahomed stated before the Committing Magistrate that he had gone for the investigation of Kishno's case that he and the policemen were obstructed and pushed so he ordered the constables to handcuff Gori Shanker and Kassim. In the Sessions Court he adhered to that statement and in reply to questions by the Court admitted that he ordered his constables to tie Gori Shanker and Kassim with a rope.

[8] A number of witnesses have been examined in support of the prosecution version, and the defence also examined witnesses in support of their version. The learned Additional Sessions Judge believed the evidence of the prosecution witnesses which he considered, was borne out by the circumstances and the probabilities of the case, and disbelieved the version of the defence witnesses, whom he has referred as 'police pimps." He held that the complaint filed by Kishno was imaginary and was inspired by someone and was merely used by the appellants as a handle for their ill-treatment of the complainant. He further held that the appellants abused their position as police officers and deliberately molested and humiliated the complainant, that the alleged obstruction to the police, on which ground the appellant Jan Mahomed justified his action, was imaginary, and that the incident took place as alleged by the prosecution and that the defence version was false.

[9] It has been urged by Mr. Lulla for the appellants that the prosecution version should have been disbelieved and that the defence version that Gori Shanker and Kassim were handcuffed and tied together with a rope because they obstructed the police in the investigation of the complaint filed by Kishno, should be believed. Mr. Lulla has further urged that the evidence of the complainant should not be relied on because of certain discrepancies and because the complainant tried to involve also three other police officers, namely, Inspector, Samuel Ghani and Sub-Inspectors, Kanayalal and Sahibdino, on a charge of abetment of the offence in a complaint made by him 15 months after the offence. We do not think that there are any such discrepancies in the evidence of the complainants to discredit his evidence, nor do we see any reason to reject his evidence because it gives more details than the account given in the written complaint which was filed by him on the day after the offence. It is not that the complainant has tried to involve three other superior police officers for the first time 15 months after the original complaint, for it is in evidence that on 6-7-1944, i. e, a few days after the offence, he made an application to the Inspector General of Police in which he has made a complaint against these police officers. In that application he stated :

"There can be no manner of doubt that these Head Constables in the town of Hyderabad would not ordinarily be so highhanded as they have been unless they were engaged to perpetrate the crime by their Superior Officers whose antecedent and subsequent conduct makes out a complete case of conspiracy against them. These officers are Messrs Ghani, Sahibdino and Kanayalal."

In the formal complaint made by him to the Magistrate against these police officers (EX. 36) he has given his reasons for believing that the appellants acted in the manner they did because of abetment by the three superior police officers It may be noted that these three officers were also committed for trial along with the appellants but the commitment was quashed by a Bench of this Court on the ground that it was not likely that any Court could properly convict an Inspector and two Sub-Inspectors on a complaint made after a lapse of so many months when in the first complaint they were not involved But the circumstances that the commitment of these three officers was quashed does not throw doubt on the prosecution case against the appellants. The learned Additional Sessions Judge has in his judgment stated :

"The three police officers are therefore happily out of the scene and it is the two head constables of police who obviously at their bidding went to disgrace Gori Shanker for his checkiness in refusing passes to the police, who are undergoing this trial."

[10] In this appeal we are not concerned with the question of the complicity of these officers, the committal proceedings against whom have already been quashed. But the fact that these police officers were committed for trial along with the appellants is of some relevance in assessing the evidence of Kanayalal and Sahibdino who have given evidence as defence witnesses and who can, by no means, be considered as disinterested witnesses.

[12] We may now refer to the evidence of some of the defence witnesses, who have supported the appellants' case. (After referring to defence evidence the judgment continued :)

[13] It is not credible that the complainant, who is a cinema Manager, a retired accountant of the B. B. C. I. Railway and a person of some social status, should have acted in the manner alleged by the defence witnesses, merely because police officers wanted to make a mashirnama in respect of the complaint filed by Kishno. It is the defence case that all the police officers were thrown out of the cinema by the complainant and his men and the gate closed. If they had succeeded in overpowering the police party and throwing them out, it is not believable that the complainant would submit to himself and his servant Kassim being handcuffed and tied with a rope. If he was so powerful and so many men were at his disposal, he would not have allowed himself to be humiliated in this manner. If the appellant, Jan Mahomed went to the cinema to make a bona fide investigation into the complaint filed by Kishno, it was not necessary that another Head Constable and so many other policemen should accompany him, nor was it necessary for them to take a pair of handcuffs and a rope. Such a large police party was not needed in the investigation of a petty offence It may well be that such a large police party was taken because it was apprehended by the appellants and the superior officers who inspired this proceeding that the highhanded and outrageous proceeding on which they were about to embark might meet with opposition and they might not otherwise be be able to carry out their object of marching Gori Shanker in handcuffs through the town of Hyderabad to the police station.

[14] It has been urged that as a complaint of a cognizable offence had been filed against Gori Shanker and his men, the appellants had a right to arrest Gori Shanker and Kassim. Section 54,

Criminal P. C, lays down that a police officer may arrest any person who has been concerned in any cognizable offence or against whom a reasonable complaint has been made, or credible information has been received, or a reasonable suspicion exists of his having been so concerned. It is, therefore, relevant to consider whether in this case the police regarded the first information report of Kishno as credible information. In that complaint, the boy Kishno stated that he purchased a first class ticket for 15 annas and sought admission when the gate-keeper Kassim said that the ticket was not valid, dragged him to the Manager, slapped him and called 5 or 6 of his servants and they, including the manager, gave him fist blows and kicks on the arms and back. Kishno was accompanied to the police station by Hiranand, brother of Sub-Inspector Kanayalal, and Pribhdas, a police Munshi. Hiranand had come to see the picture 'kismat' which had a long run and had attracted a large crowd, but did not see it, and interested himself in the boy's complaint and went to the police station. While Pribhdas, who had come from Dadu, also denied himself the pleasure of seeing the picture, so that he could champion the cause of the boy. The evidence of the complainant supported by the record of the cinema shows that Kishno had sought admission on an expired ticket which had been issued the previous day. He was admittedly refused admission. It is difficult to believe that the cinema Manager would find it necessary to require the services of 5 or 6 men to beat. Kishno who appears from the record to be a boy aged 13 years. No cinema Manager would act in such an unbusiness like manner, nor was there any occasion for so many people to beat the boy. It was sufficient to refuse admission to him, Kishno was given a letter by the police to the Civil Hospital. But he did not go on that day. Dr. Mohandas (Ex. 54) has stated that Kishno had some injuries which appeared to have been caused by finger nails, that the injuries were trivial and did not need treatment. As already pointed out above, in the first information Kishno has stated that he was given fist blows and kicks, an allegation which is not borne out by the medical evidence. It is probable that these injuries with the finger nails were subsequently manipulated to support the false first information report. It might be mentioned that Gori Shanker and some others of the cinema staff were prosecuted by the police, as a result of the complaint filed by Kishno, and were discharged, the Magistrate holding that there was no case against them. In the present case the defence cited Kishno and Hiranand as witnesses but did not examine them. They, however, examined Pribhdas This Pribhdas, who is a police Munshi, has stated that he was present when the boy sought admission, that the Manager called out to his men, that 5 or 6 men came and the boy was kicked out, that he remonstrated with Kassim and asked him not to drag the boy. While he has given evidence that it was Kassim who dragged the boy, when he gave his evidence before the Committing Magistrate he was unable to identify Kassim but pointed out some other person, and his explanation is "I did not know Kassim much. I therefore picked out another Makrani in his stead who looked like him." Before the Committing Magistrate he had stated that he could not say what picture he had gone to see. It appears that Pribhdas was not at all present in the cinema when Kishno sought admission, and that he is a got-up witness.

[15] It is the defence case that the appellant Jan Mahomed went to investigate this offence. No investigation was done and the appellants at once without giving any reason handcuffed Kassim and Gori Shanker, tied them together with a rope and tried to march them to the police station We have no doubt that they did so not in the bona fide performance of their duties, but with the improper motive of disgracing and humiliating Gori Shanker. As regards the alleged obstruction of the police and escape from custody it may be noted that though the offence is alleged to have been committed at 8-30 P. M. the first information report in respect of this alleged obstruction was not filed till 1.30 A.M. The defence relied on mashirnamas, which were made to show that the clothes of police constable Varis were torn and that there was an injury on the person of constable Jan Mahomed. Of these mashirs, Shafi Mahomed (Ex. 54) is a taxi driver. who keeps his taxi at the City Police station. He is obviously a man at the beck and call of the police. While the other mashir is one Abdullah, whose name, it is in evidence, had been suggested to the police by the taxi driver Shafi Mahomed. In the mashirnamas this mashir is described as a resident of Tando Wali Mahomed, Hyderabad Sind, but he has admitted that at that time he was living at Tando Adam and had come to Hyderabad on a visit. This mashir is referred to by the learned Additional Sessions Judge in his judgment as a police pimp. An examination of the mashirnama (Exs. 85 and 86) shows that the dates on both these mashirnamas have been altered. In Ex. 86 it is clear the date written first was 30th May and that it has been subsequently changed to 29th May. We have already given our reasons for our view that no injury was caused by any of the complainant's party to constable Jan Mahomed. We have no doubt that these mashirnamas about the torn clothes and injury caused to constable Jan Mahomed have been subsequently fabricated and that they were not in fact prepared at the time of the incident as alleged by the mashirs, and it appears to us that the evidence of the mashirs is false. It might be mentioned here that the complainant and his men were prosecuted by the police for the offence of obstructing the policemen and escaping from lawful custody and were discharged, the Magistrate holding there was no case against them. There can be no doubt that the story of the alleged obstruction to the police and escape from lawful custody is an imaginary one. It appears that after the appellants had acted in a high-handed and illegal manner and were unable to carry out their object of marching Gori Shanker handcuffed through the town, they lost their nerve; when Gori Shanker refused to go to the police station in that condition handcuffed and roped with his servant, it would have been necessary to carry or drag him to the police station. The appellant Pandhikhan went out to send a "phone message" to Sub-Inspector Kanayalal of the Market Police station. It is significant that Pandhikhan did not endeavour to get any help from the City Police station within the limits of which the cinema is situated, nor did he communicate to the Cantonment police station which, it is in evidence is also nearer to the cinema than the Market Police station. Sub-Inspector Kanayalal of the Market Police station, to whom Pandikhan sent the 'phone message' is the brother of Hiranand, who had a hand in inspiring the false complaint filed by Kishno.

[16] It has been urged by Mr. Lulla that as the complainant has admitted that he did not know the appellants before, and that the appellants had not themselves asked for free passes and as the learned Judge himself found that the appellants did what they did at the bidding of the superior police officers no offence was committed in merely carrying out orders of their superiors, if those orders were to bring the complainant and Kassim handcuffed to the police station, particularly as first information report of a cognizable offence had been registered. It was sought to develop this point by arguing that the appellants were entitled to carry out their superiors' orders and they could not be convicted under S. 220 Penal Code, merely because of the manner in which they performed their task. In the first place, it is not the appellants' case that they were ordered to arrest and bring the complainant handcuffed to the police station. Pandhikhan's case is that he was not present when the police party went to the cinema to arrest Gori Shanker. While it is the case of the appellant Jan Mahomed that he handcuffed Gori Shanker and Kassim because they obstructed him. His case was that he went there to make a mashirnama when he was obstructed in the investigation. We have already given our reasons for the view that this story of obstruction and injury caused to policeman Jan Mahomed is imaginary. The appellant Pandhikhan went out of his way to cause injury to the complainant. Section 46, Criminal P C., lays down that in making an arrest the police officer or other person making the same shall actually touch or confine the body of the person to be arrested, unless there be a submission to the custody by word or action. Section 50 lays down that the person arrested shall not be subjected to more restraint than is necessary to prevent his escape. The appellants did not give out why they were arresting Gori Shanker, gave no opportunity to him to submit to custody and at once proceeded to handcuff him and tie him with a rope. It was not at all necessary to handcuff Gori Shanker as if he was a dacoit and would have escaped if this was not done. Still less was it necessary to cause an injury to him. In handcuffing Gori Shanker and tying him with a rope, the appellants intended to disgrace and humiliate a respectable man. They were acting maliciously i. e., with an improper motive and knowing that their action was contrary to law. They did not go with a large police party taking handcuffs and a rope merely for the investigation of an obviously trivial complaint, which they very well knew was without foundation. In fact no investigation was done. They have not tried to justify their act on the ground that they had the right to arrest Gori Shanker under S. 157 (1) or S. 54, Criminal P. C., and they sought to justify their act by setting up a false story that the police party were obstructed in the investigation. The circumstance that the same pair of handcuffs was used for handcuffing the complainant and his servant and that they were tied with a rope also shows that the appellants were out to humiliate the complainant.

[17] Next it was urged by Mr. Lulla that we should accept Pandhikhan's defence that he was not present when Jan Mahomed ordered the complainant to be handcuffed and that he came afterwards with Sub-Inspector Kanayalal. It is further urged that his case has not been separately considered by the learned Judge and so he has been prejudiced. The learned Judge has in his judgment dealt with the part played by Pandhikhan and with the evidence in support of it. He rejected the version of Pandhikhan that he was not present when the incident happened and came afterwards with Sub-Inspector Kanayalal. We have already dealt with the evidence of the prosecution witnesses, which clearly shows that appellant Pandhikhan was present when Gori Shanker and Kassim were handcuffed and that it was Pandhikhan who hit the complainant with a dandi. Pandhikhan's name was given as one of the two accused persons in the complaint made by Gori Shanker on the day after the offence. It is true that in that complaint it is not stated specifically that Pandhikhan caused the injury to the complainant, but it is stated that the appellants gave him the injury. It would have been better if when examining the complainant under S. 200, Criminal P. C., a question had been asked as to which of the two appellants had caused this injury. But the circumstance that it is not specifically stated in the complaint which of the two accused gave the injury does not falsify the evidence of the complainant and other prosecution witnesses against Pandhikhan. We have already pointed out the significance of Pandhikhan sending a 'phone message' to Sub-Inspector Kanayalal after the situation had gone out of control on account of the high-handed and outrageous conduct of the police party. It is also significant that when Kanayalal came he asked Pandhikhan and not Jan Mahomed to remove the handcuffs Pandhikhan's case is that constable Harpaldas came to inform him that there was a quarrel and that the policemen had handcuffed Gori Shanker and that thereafter he went to the City Police station and 'phoned' to Kanayalal. Harpaldas was not examined as a witness in support of this allegation. It may be noted that according to Pandhikhan's evidence in the obstruction case against Gori Shanker, which has been brought on record and is relevant as an admission, Pandhikhan was not on duty on that day and stated that he was not well. It is strange that Harpaldas should not go to the City police station to get help but should go to the house of this Head Constable, who was not on duty and lying ill. We have no doubt that Pandhikhan had accompanied the police party and that he took part in the offence as alleged by the prosecution witnesses. If Pandhikhan came only with the Sub-Inspector and the only thing he did was to remove the handcuffs at the request of Sub-Inspector Kanayalal, there was no reason for the complainant to implicate Pandhikhan.

[18] We, therefore, accept the prosecution evidence and the finding of the learned Additional Sessions Judge that the two appellants maliciously confined Gori Shanker and Kassim, knowing that they were acting contrary to law. We also accept the prosecution evidence that Pandhikhan caused hurt to the complainant.

[19] It has been urged before us that the sentence passed in this case should be reduced, for according to the finding of the learned Judge himself the two appellants had no particular personal grudge of their own against Gori Shanker, and were not known before to the complainant and that they had been instigated by the superior police officers and were fighting their battle and that the conviction of these appellants will mean loss of service and pension. The offence committed is a very serious one. But we think we ought to take into consideration on the question of sentence, the circumstance that the appellants were it was clear acting under the instructions of their superior police officers. Taking all the circumstances into account, we are of opinion that the ends of justice would be sufficiently met if the sentence imposed is one of one year's rigorous imprisonment and we accordingly reduce the sentence to that period.

[20] We therefore confirm the convictions of the appellants under S. 220, Penal Code, but reduce the sentence passed on each of the appellants to rigorous imprisonment for one year. The additional conviction and sentence of fine of Rs. 100 or in default one month's rigorous imprisonment passed on the appellant Pandhikhan under S. 323, Penal Code, is confirmed.

[21] An application has been made to us that if the convictions and sentences are confirmed, the appellants should be classified as 'B' Class prisoners. Affidavits have been filed to the effect that the appellant Pandhikhan has been drawing a salary of Rs. 129 a month and has had 29 years service in the police department, and that the appellant Jan Mahomed has been drawing a pay of Rs. 90 per month and owns immovable property. The two appellants were head constables and are obviously not of the class of the ordinary jail population. We recommend that they be treated as 'B' Class prisoners.

[22] Tyabji C. J. — I agree with what has just been said by my learned brother and will only add a few short remarks.

[23] I agree that in this case the main allegations which constituted the prosecution case, have been proved beyond any doubt, and that the pleas set up by the two appellants were entirely untrue.

[24] There can be no doubt that the report Ex. 43, made by the boy Kishno, alleging an offence of rioting, was substantially a false report, inspired by some police officers, superior to the two appellants. There is no doubt that this report was made with the object of providing a pretext for harassing and humiliating Gori Shanker, which was the main object of those who inspired this report and instigated the two appellants to act as they acted. It is clear that the two appellants accompanied by 8 or 10 other police officers marched up to the Empire Cinema House, handcuffed the gate-keeper Kassim and bound him with a rope, took him in that condition inside the house of Gori Shanker, where he was entertaining some guests at dinner, and then handcuffed Gori Shanker, with the same fetters with which Kassim had been handcuffed, and also tied him with a rope, beating him during the course of the rough handling. When Gori Shanker attempted to question the appellants why and on what authority the appellants were so acting, he was told to shut up and to proceed to the police station with them. The refusal of Gori Shanker and Kassim to march to the police station, in that condition, and the sensation created in the place, brought a number of people, including several influential men, to the spot. This unnerved the appellants and prevented them from proceeding further with their object. They then sent information to Sub-Inspector Kanayalal, whose brother had accompanied Kishno when he had made his report, and who, it is significant, was not attached to the police station where Kishno's report was made but worked at another police station Sub-Inspector Kanayalal then came there, and ostensibly befriended Gori Shanker and Kassim in their plight, and had the fetters and the ropes removed from their persons. But this was after Gori Shanker and Kassim had been outrageously illtreated and humiliated and kept in confinement for a very considerable time, more than an hour.

[25] My learned brother has dealt with the facts of this case very fully and stated the reasons why it is impossible to accept the explanations given on behalf of the appellants. The story, that the appellants and the large force of policemen they took with them had only gone to the Cinema in order to inquire into Kishno's report, and had been obstructed when they attempted to carry out their investigation that they had even been pushed out and beaten by Gori Shanker and his men, was clearly a fantastic one, having regard to the proved circumstances. It is also impossible to accept the plea of appellant Pandhi Khan, that he was not there with appellant Jan Mahomed at the time when Kassim and Gori Shanker were handcuffed and bound up, beaten and confined. His plea was that he only came there later with Sub-Inspector Kanayalal and, under the order of Kanayalal unfastened the handcuffs and removed the ropes with which Gori Shanker and Kassim had been bound. This plea was proved to be false by the evidence of reliable witnesses, and would attribute to Gori Shanker and the witnesses a desire to implicate falsely, and without any reason, one to whom they if the plea were to be accepted, had every reason to be grateful. It is unthinkable that the witnesses would immediately after the incident have falsely implicated Pandhi Khan, if he had only come later, accompanying the Sub-Inspector and had released Gori Shanker and Kassim. Every fact in the story which the appellants were constrained to allege in their defence, has been clearly shown to be false on the facts and circumstances proved in this case.

[26] As the main charge against the appellants was one under S. 220, Penal Code, it was necessary for us to enquire very carefully into the question whether it had been satistactorily established that what the appellants did was contrary to law, and known to the appellants to be contrary to law. We are satisfied that these essentials were clearly established beyond any doubt in this case.

[27] It was argued that even if the main prosecution allegations be accepted as proved, the appellants were still entitled to contend that they did not act contrary to the law, when they carried out the orders of their superiors, and arrested Gori Shanker and Kassim, against whom information had been given at the police station, that they had committed an offence of rioting falling under S. 147, Penal Code, which was a cognizable offence. But it must be emphasised that before any arrest can be made by the police without a warrant, either under S. 54, or under 157, Criminal P C., it must be shown that there was credible information given to the police, or that the officer in charge of a police station had reason to suspect the commission of a cognizable offence. In this case Kishno's complaint, we are satisfied, was a false one inspired by police officers and known to them to be false. It is impossible under these circumstances to accept the contention that there was either credible information or reason to suspect that a cognizable offence had been committed. It was known that that was not the case. The appellants had, therefore, no right to arrest Gori Shanker or Kassim. But even if one were, for one moment, to assume that the appellants were not aware of the fact that Kishno's comp aint was false, not aware that they were asked to make an arrest in a case where no arrest could legally be effected at all, and even if it be assumed that the two appellants were sent to the Empire Cinema with instructions to arrest Gori Shanker and Kassim—it may be mentioned that this was not at any time the case of the two appellants who contended that they had only been sent to make an enquiry—the deliberate rough handling handcuffing and confining was still contrary to law, and must have been known to them to be contrary to law. Section 46, Criminal P. C., has to be read together with S. 50. Section 50 lays down:

"The person arrested shall not be subjected to more restraint than is necessary to prevent his escape."

The first part of S. 46 says:

"In making an arrest the police-officer or other person making the same shall actually touch or confine the body of the person to be arrested, unless there be a submission to the custody by word or action."

[28] It is clear, therefore, that confinement and rough handling are not permissible and are contrary to law, when the person to be arrested submits to the custody that is to the restraint which is necessary and sufficient for the purposes of the arrest. An arrest is completed when there is a submission to the custody by word or action. Every police officer, we are entitled to presume, knows that in making an arrest he must not subject the person to be arrested to unnecessary brutality, and that he cannot confine any person unless the person refuses to submit to custody and it becomes necessary to confine him, and cl 2 of S. 46 is brought into application. We are satisfied that cl. 2 of S. 46 never came into application in this case. The evidence abundantly establishes that at the time when the two appellants handcuffed Kassim and Gori Shanker and tied them up with a rope, and kept them in confinement, nothing was said or done by Kassim or by Gori Shanker which justified the appellants to think that they would not submit to custody, if an attempt to arrest them in a legal and proper way was made. The appellants knew that they were not entitled to act in the manner they did and their subsequent conduct, the false pleas put forward on their behalf, and their unwillingness to own what they actually did, clearly shows that. It has been proved that Kassim and Gori Shanker were never required to submit to an arrest, that when Gori Shanker asked them why the appellants were acting in the manner in which they acted, the appellants merely asked him to shut up. It is quite clear that the appellants had no intention at all of arresting Gori Shanker and Kassim in a legal and proper manner. This was also not a case where the appellants, though acting in an improper manner, still did something which the law permitted them to do. The law did not permit them to rough-handle and confine Kassim and Gori Shanker.

[29] Under these circumstances it is clear that what the appellants did was contrary to law, and known to them to be contrary to law.

Tikamdas Bassarmal — for Plaintiff.

G. P. Shahani — for Defendant.

Judgment.—This is an application made by the defendant under O. 23, R. 3, Civil P. C. under the following circumstances.

[2] The plaintiff Motandas Tourmal and the defendant Wadhumal J. Wadhwani executed a reference to arbitration on 11-8-1945 in the matter of their disputes which had arisen and were still pending between them in regard to the premises in the occupation of the defendant in favour of Mr. Fatehchand Assudomal, Advocate-General of this Court, as their sole arbitrator.

[3] On 15-12-1945 Mr. Fatehchand made an award by which the defendant was to vacate the premises in his occupation within one month from the passing of the decree in terms of the award. It was stated in the award that the defendant, was, however, free to find accommodation elsewhere if he desires to do so and will not be obliged to accept the alternative accommodation provided in the award.

[4] On 21-5-1946, Mr. Bhagwandas S. Raheja, advocate of the plaintiff, made an application under O. 23, R. 3, Civil P. C, stating that the plaintiff and the defendant had compromised the subject-matter of Suit No. 19 of 1946, on the terms mentioned in a compromise application filed before the Rent Controller of Karachi in March 1946, and prayed that the compromise be recorded and a decree passed in its terms. Upon this application a notice was ordered to issue to the defendant, who filed his objections on 5-9-1946. On 21-1-1947, however, the plaintiff withdrew his application under O. 23, R. 3, Civil P. C. and it was dismissed with no order as to costs.

[5] A fortnight later, on 5-2-1947, Mr. Shahani, advocate of the defendant, filed an application under O. 23, R. 3, Civil P. C., to which Mr. Tikamdas for the plaintiff has raised a number of objections.

[6] Mr Tikamdas contends that an application under O. 23, R. 3, Civil P. C. does not lie if it purports to modify or vary an award as is sought to be done in this case. His argument is that although S. 41, Arbitration Act, 1940, says that—"the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, shall apply to all proceedings before the Court, and to all appeals, under this Act," it expressly lays down that it is subject to the provisions of the Arbitration Act itself and the rules made thereunder. Mr. Tikamdas has invited my attention to the relevant provisions of the Arbitration Act which tend to show that an application under O. 23, R. 3, Civil P. C. is not competent in the matter of a pending award.

[7] Section 15, Arbitration Act, 1940, reads :

"The Court may by order modify or correct an award
(a) where it appears that a part of the award is upon a matter not referred to arbitration and such part can be separated from the other part and does not affect the decision on the matter referred ; or
(b) where the award is imperfect in form, or contains any obvious error which can be amended without affecting such decision ; or
(c) where the award contains a clerical mistake or an error arising from an accidental slip or omission."

It is clear that the modification or correction referred to in S. 15, Arbitration Act is not one which arises by reason of anything external to the award such as an application under O. 23, R. 3, Civil P. C. The effect of my granting an application under O. 23, R. 3, Civil P. C., would be to modify the award in such a manner as would be contrary to the provisions of S. 15, Arbitration Act.

[8] Under S. 16, Arbitration Act, the Court has power to remit an award from time to time. If the Court neither corrects nor modifies an award under S. 15 and does not remit an award under S. 16, Arbitration Act, or set it aside under S. 30, the only course left to the Court is to act in accordance with S. 17, Arbitration Act, which says :

"Where the Court sees no cause to remit the award or any of the matters referred to arbitration for reconsideration or to set aside the award, the Court shall after the time for making an application to set aside the award has expired, or such application having been made, after refusing it, proceed to pronounce judgment according to the award, and upon the judgment so pronounced a decree shall follow, and no appeal shall lie from such decree except on the ground that it is in excess of, or not otherwise in accordance with, the award "

[9] Now upon an application made under O. 23, R. 3, Civil P. C. the Court has to satisfy itself

"that a suit has been adjusted wholly or in part by any lawful agreement or compromise, or where the defendant satisfies the plaintiff in respect of the whole or any part of the subject matter of the suit the Court shall order such agreement, compromise or satisfaction to be recorded, and shall pass a decree in accordance therewith so far as it relates to the suit."

[10] If I were to entertain the present application, whether made by the parties jointly or individually, and if I am satisfied that the agreement is a lawful agreement and the plaintiff has been partly or wholly satisfied by the defendant, I would have to pass a decree in accordance with the compromise so far as it relates to the suit. But it is common ground that there is no suit before me. It is true the award has been registered as a suit under R 282, cl. (iii) of the Rules of the Chief Court (Original Side); but I do not think the "suit" referred to in O. 23, R. 3, Civil P. C., includes an award which has been registered as a suit. But apart from this, if I were to pass a decree in terms of the compromise, I would have to pass a decree awarding the entire premises to the defendant and give the defendant credit for rent for the month of May 1946, and make a further provision in the decree that future rent of the premises will be Rs. 127 8-0 plus ten per cent., whereas, if I were to pass a decree in terms of the award, which I am bound to do under the provisions of S. 17, Arbitration Act, if I do not set aside, remit or modify the award, the decree would require the defendant to vacate the premises in his occupation within one month from the passing of the award decree, and on his getting alternative accommodation. In other words, by granting the application under O. 23, R. 3, Civil P. C., I would be doing something contrary to the provisions of S. 17, Arbitration Act.

[11] It is true that in A. I. R. 1945 Pesh. 41,[1] Almond J. C and Mir Ahmad A J. C., took the view that the provisions of O. 23, R. 3, Civil P. C. apply to an award by reason of S. 41, Arbitration Act. But with great respect, I am unable to agree with this view. Mir Ahmad A. J. C. concedes in his judgment that S. 41, Arbitration Act would not empower the Court to interfere with the award except under conditions laid down in the Arbitration Act. But the learned Judge thought that the Arbitration Act did not preclude a plaintiff from withdrawing his claim or the parties from adjusting their dispute even after the award was made. The learned Judge, therefore, came to the conclusion that the parties had a right to ask the Court to set aside an award and substitute another agreement in its place. The difficulty I have in accepting this position is that its acceptance would furnish another ground for setting aside an award, a ground which is not a ground mentioned in S. 30, Arbitration Act. For instance, the parties to the award might agree to have the award set aside by consent and ask the Court to pass an order accordingly. Plainly the Court would decline to act in this manner as there is no provision in the Arbitration Act which authorises a Court to set aside an award by consent of the parties. If the award could not be set aside by consent of the parties, it could be adjusted by their consent except after an award decree is passed. Where the parties have adjusted their differences after an award has been made, the proper course for them is to allow a judgment and decree to be passed in terms of the award, and then to make an application under the provisions of O. 21, R. 2, Civil P. C., notifying the adjustment.

[12] Mir Ahmad A. J. C. referred to two decisions of the Lahore High Court, one in A. I R. 1914 Lah. 313,[2] and another in A. I. R. 1921 Lah. 34,[3] in which apparently the view taken was that proceedings under para. 17 of Sch. 2, Civil P. C., could be compromised and a decree passed on the compromise.

[13] A Division Bench of the Oudh Judicial Commissioner's Court in A. I. R. 1922 Oudh 189,[4] has also taken the same view as was taken by the learned Judges of the Lahore High Court.

[14] Jack and Patterson JJ. however in A.I.R. 1937 Cal. 20.,[5] have taken a different, and, in my opinion, the correct view of the provisions of O 23, R. 3, Civil P. C., in their application to an award. In that case, after the award was filed in Court and before a decree was passed in its terms, one of the parties contended that the matter had been settled, and prayed that a decree be passed in terms of the compromise. According to the alleged compromise, one of the parties had given up its rights under the award and had made an amicable settlement of all the disputes. The Court in which the award was filed refused to pass a compromise decree. The matter came up before a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court, and the learned Judges held that the Court below had rightly refused to pass a compromise decree, in proceedings under Sch. 2, Civil P. C, and that upon an application for the filing of an award, the only form which such a decree should take was an order that an award should be filed, and as the parties did not unite in praying that the application should be dismissed, it was the duty of the Judge to proceed to consider whether the award, which had been submitted, should be filed.

[15] It is true the Calcutta High Court was considering the question of passing a compromise decree in variation of the award before it with reference to the applicability of S. 115, Civil P. C.. but as the learned Judges held that the Court below had jurisdiction to pass the decree which it did, and upheld the order of the Court below, it manifestly took the view that after an award is passed, a decree cannot be passed in terms of a compromise arrived at between the parties.

[16] In an earlier decision of the Calcutta High Court in A. I. R. 1924 Cal. 722,[6] Sanderson C J. and Richardson J. had occasion to say:

"The argument presented on behalf of the respondent is that the matters in dispute in this suit were referred to arbitration ; that reference has never been superseded, and, under those circumstances, it is not competent to the Court to record the terms of compromise."

The observation suggests that an application under O. 23, R. 3, Civil P. C, to record a compromise and pass a judgment in terms thereof, during the pendency of objections to an award, is incompetent.

[17] I would accordingly dismiss the application under O. 23, R. 3, Civil P. C., with costs.

Dharamdas Mulchand—for Applicants.

Parmanand Kundanmal, Public Prosecutor for Sind—for the Crown.

Order.—This is a revision application by two Hindu Zamindars, Hemandas and Gehimal, both residents of Shahdadpur, Nawabshah district, seeking the intervention of this Court in a case in which the Additional Sessions Judge of Hyderabad has confirmed their convictions under S. 193, Penal Code, and sentences of imprisonment upto the rising of the Court and fines of Rs. 1000 each, or in default rigorous imprisonment for six months, passed by the Special First Class Magistrate, Tando Allahyar.

[2] The proceedings out of which this application arises commenced as far back as 1943, and relate to the part the applicants are said to have taken in connection with certain proceedings under the Sind Suppression of Hur Outrages Act (1 [I] of 1942).

[3] It would appear from the facts on record that on 25th February 1943, the police arrested two men Dhaniparto and Laik, and sent them up on the following day, 26th February 1943, before a Magistrate for the purpose of an enquiry under S. 3 of the aforesaid Sind Suppression of Hur Outrages Act. The situation in Sind at the time, arising out of the activities of the Hurs and the circumstances under which the Sind Suppression of Hur Outrages Act, 1 [I] of 1942 was passed have been set out in the following words by a Bench of this Court in Cri. Revn. Appln. No. 344 of 1945,[1] decided on 13th February 1946 :

"In 1942 there existed in this Province a state of grave crisis arising out of the criminal activities of the Hurs. Acts of sabotage and violence were committed on an extensive scale in certain areas of the Province. These included attacks on Railway and Police Stations, the murder of police officers, the breaching of canal banks and similar outrages

The Sind Government took steps to meet this situation. Special Officers were appointed for the areas concerned, and on 8th April 1942, there was brought into force the Sind Suppression of Hur Outrages Act (1 [I] of 1942), the Preamble of which reads :

'Whereas it is expedient to make special provisions for the purpose of suppressing the criminal activities in which persons commonly known as the Hurs or Lurs in Sind are at present engaged and for the trial, and punishment of certain offences .....'

The state of affairs continued, however, and assumed the proportions of an armed rebellion. In May 1942, there occurred the derailment of the Lahore Mail train and the murder of a number of the passengers and orgy of looting. On 1st June 1942, so grave was the emergency, that Martial Law was introduced into the affected areas. The situation was aggravated because a grave state of national emergency arising out of the War then existed."

The Magistrate acting in the present case under S. 3 of the Act pursued his inquiries against Dhaniparto and Laik and examined a number of police officers. Before the completion of the inquiry, however, he extended it under S. 4 (1) of the Act which has since been abrogated and which read :

"4. (1) An inquiry for the purpose of S. 3 may be conducted so far as may be necessary, out of Court."

These words are far from precise. They might in one sense be read to mean that the Magistrate was at liberty, perhaps for the purpose of obtaining a little fresh air, to hold his Court outside the precincts of the ordinary Court building. It appears however, that the words were intended to mean and interpreted as meaning that a Magistrate holding an inquiry under S. 3 of the Act was entitled privately, in the absence of the accused, and not at the time he was actually sitting in Court, to make private inquiries of any person as to the necessity for the execution of a bond by the accused.

[4] Acting thus under cl. (1) of S. 4 of the Act, the learned Magistrate examined the two applicants Gehimal and Hemandas. Gehimal was examined on 19-4-1942 and Hemandas on 20-4-1942, and their statements, details of which will hereinafter be referred to, were taken on oath and reduced to writing. The Magistrate subsequently completed his inquiries in Court.

[5] Clause (3) of S. 4 of the Hur Act, provides for an inquiry in the presence of the accused :

"Every person in respect of whom the inquiry is made shall have an opportunity of showing cause in Court why such bond should not be required and of having his witnesses examined there and of cross-examining any witness not called by himself who may testify there to the necessity for the execution of such bond."

It is not very clear how sub-cls. (1) and (3) of S. 4 were to be worked together. The presumption is that if the Magistrate in pursuing inquiries under sub-cl. (1) of S. 4 of the Act obtained any useful information or any information upon which he proposed to rely for the purpose of binding over the accused before the Court, he was to recall the witnesses from whom this information was obtained and examine them in Court in the presence of the accused, who would then be entitled to cross-examine them.

[6] Gehimal and Hemandas were never called as witnesses in Court and never examined in the presence of the accused. In due course, Laik and Dhaniparto, the accused, were discharged on 22nd June 1943. On 7-9-1943 the Public Prosecutor of Nawabshah presented in the Court of the Additional District Magistrate, Nawabshah, a complaint under S. 476 Criminal P. C., against Gehimal and Hemandas of offences under Ss. 193, 211, 182 and 120B, Penal Code, based on the statements made by them to the Special Magistrate on 19th and 20th April 1942 respectively. The false statements attributed to each of the applicants were set out in an appendage to the complaint. Those attributed to Gehimal were four in number and are as follows :

(a) "Hurs live in this Shadi Panji village and other Hurs visit them there."

(2) "They (accused) harbour Hurs of Dhingano Kirio and Darhun Machi."

(3) "Laik, Dhaniparto, gang of Darhun and gang of Dhingano, have committed dacoities of wheat granneries."

(4) "The age of Laik is about 35-36 years and the age of Dhaniparto is less than 40 years. The beards of both are perhaps shaven and cut with scissors. I know them since 4-5 years."

And that attributed to Hemandas is as follows :

"I know Dhaniparto and Laik Machhi. They are brothers The age of accused Dhaniparto is 46-48 years. The age of Laik is about 40 years. They both used to render help to the Hur dacoits' gang of Darhun Machhi. These both brothers are scoundrels."

It was asserted in the complaint that not only did these statements constitute false evidence in judicial proceedings within the meaning of S. 193, Penal Code, but also that upon these statements the Magistrate's Court had instituted proceedings against Dhaniparto and Laik under the Hur Act, and it was, therefore, complained that Gehimal and Hemandas had also committed an offence under Ss. 182 and 211, Penal Code.

[7] This complaint was sent by the Additional District Magistrate, Nawabshah, to one Mr. Sobhraj, who was a Special Magistrate to try these cases under the Hur Act, and Mr. Sobhraj in due course made a complaint against Gehimal and Hemandas in compliance with the application of the Public Prosecutor of Nawabshah. Gehimal and Hemandas were eventually tried for the offences specified in the complaint by the Special First Class Magistrate, Tando Allahyar, and both convicted of offences under Ss. 120B, 193 and 182, Penal Code, and in addition Gehimal was convicted of an offence under S. 211, Penal Code. They appealed, and the learned Second Additional Sessions Judge of Hyderabad, acquitted them of all offences except those under S. 193, Penal Code.

[8] Mr. Dharamdas, who appears on behalf of the applicants, in the first place set out to argue that assuming that the applicants had made false statements, they have not committed any offence within the purview of S. 193, Penal Code. He contended that the statements having been taken out of Court under S. 4, cl. (1), Sind Suppression of Hur Outrages Act, they were not taken at any stage of a judicial proceeding; he emphasised that at the time the statements were taken, the accused persons Laik and Dhaniparto were not present, and that, in fact these statements were never used in the inquiry against these persons.

[9] Explanation 2 to S. 193, Penal Code, says:

"An investigation directed by law preliminary to a proceeding before a Court of Justice, is a stage of a judicial proceeding, though that investigation may not take place before a Court of justice."

In S. 4, cl. (m), Criminal P. C., a "judicial proceeding" includes any proceeding in the course of which evidence is or may be legally taken on oath.

[10] As has been indicated, the terms of cl. (1) of S. 4 of the Hur Act were peculiar, and envisaged some sort of private inquiry outside the Court, the result of which might never see the light of day, and although the definitions referred to above are made as to the scope of the expression "judicial proceeding", there may be something in Mr. Dharamdas' proposition that the private inquiries embarked upon by the Magistrate under cl. (1) of S. 4 of the Hur Act did not constitute a judicial proceeding.

[11] It is, however, totally unnecessary to consider further this aspect of the case, because, assuming the statements given by Gehimal and Hemandas were not made in the course of a judicial proceeding, they would still come under the second part of S. 193, Penal Code, which penalises the intentional giving or fabrication of false evidence in any other case than a judicial proceeding.

[12] Mr. Dharamdas, therefore, eventually conceded that the sole point at issue in this application is whether in the circumstances, the applicants could be said to have intentionally given false evidence.

[13] Generally speaking, this would be a pure question of fact, but we consider that this case has been approached in an erroneous way by the Courts below. In the first place, it is obvious that the proceedings which the Public Prosecutor of Nawabshah set in motion to prosecute the applicants were based on the assumption that they instituted false proceedings under the Hur Act. It is clear from the facts stated above that they did no such thing. The proceedings against Laik and Dhaniparto had already two months before the applicants gave evidence been instituted or set in motion by police officers, and the applicants have been properly acquitted of offences under Ss. 211 and 182, Penal Code. In the next place, the Courts below failed in our opinion, to take into consideration the circumstances under which these statements were given, and that, they were in the nature of hearsay.

[14] At that time there existed much confusion caused by the Hurs, and the authorities were having considerable difficulty in obtaining information upon which to take action under the Sind Suppression of Hur Outrages Act. It is established in the proceedings before us that Gehimal definitely knew Dhaniparto. Dhaniparto in his evidence has himself admitted that he knew Gehimal for two or three years, that they used to see each other in Shahdadpur; and Dhaniparto is the father of Laik. The false statements attributed to Gehimal and Hemandas, set forth above, amount to nothing more than that they knew Dhaniparto and Laik, and that Dhaniparto and Laik were associated with Hurs. It is true that Hemandas said that they were brothers, whereas they were actually father and son; but this, we think, is totally immaterial once it is admitted that these banias knew them. The convictions under S. 193, Penal Code, have apparently proceeded upon the assumption that the falsity of the statements was as to the ages of Dhaniparto and Laik, and that they were brothers. The fact that they were not brothers but father and son is immaterial and any bania might have made the same mistake not knowing them very well. Apart from this, the evidence of Gehimal and Hemandas clearly appears to be of a general and hearsay nature.

[15] Apart, again, from this aspect of the matter, the learned Magistrate appears to have arrived at the conclusion that the statements were false on the ground that Dhaniparto and Laik themselves have denied that they are true, and that the defence witnesses have failed to establish that they are true. This seems a very peculiar way of approaching the matter. Dhaniparto and Laik would actually deny that they were Hurs or that they were associated with Hurs, and if it was sought by the prosecution to establish that Dhaniparto and Laik were not the associates of Hurs, the prosecution should, we think, have in the circumstances produced affirmative evidence to prove this other than the evidence of Dhaniparto and Laik themselves. It appears to us that this was never a case in which it was expedient to have prosecuted Gehimal and Hemandas. The case seems to have been a trivial one in the extreme, and it was never a case which should have wasted the time of Courts.

[16] Another aspect of the matter is that at the time local zamindars were expected to give all sorts of help to the police and any information within their knowledge as to the activities of Hurs and their associates, and this would include anything in the nature of rumour, and any zamindar, whether a Hindu or otherwise, who was not prepared to come forward with information would be looked upon with disfavour by the police. Moreover, the fact that Dhaniparto and Laik were discharged by the Magistrate does not necessarily give rise to the inference that they were never associated with Hurs. It is clear from the evidence of Mr. Bhagwandas, who was at that time an Inspector of Police, that Laik and Dhaniparto were suspected of being Hurs or the associates of Hurs long before they were actually sent up for inquiry under the Sind Suppression of Hur Outrages Act, and that Mr. Bhagwandas himself had been endeavouring to trace them. It was further established that a number of their relations had previous to the proceedings against them been apprehended and placed in the Hur concentration camp at Sanghar.

[17] In all the circumstances of the case, we have no hesitation in concluding that the charge under S. 193, Penal Code, against the applicants has not been established to our satisfaction. That assuming that there were inaccuracies in the applicant's evidence, it was not intentionally false evidence within the meaning of S. 193, Penal Code. We accordingly set aside the conviction of the applicants, and direct that the fines paid by them, if any, be refunded to them.

Order.—On 30-3-1937, 31-3-1937 and 5-4-1937, respondents 1 and 2 entered into three contracts at Karachi whereby the respondents 1 agreed to buy from respondents 2300, 200 and 300 tons of turia seed, and in respect of which delivery was to be given in July 1937. The three contracts contained a submission clause to the effect that in the event of any disputes arising between the parties, they were to be referred to the arbitration of two persons who were members of the Managing Committee of the Karachi Indian Merchants' Association, one to be chosen by each party.

[2] Respondent 2 carries on business at Karachi but has an office in Cawnpore in which is employed one Sunderdas as a clerk on a monthly salary of Rs. 50. On 14-7-1937 this Sunderdas and one Goverdhandas Dasani, describing himself as the proprietor of Messrs. Sanvaldas Madhavdas, respondents 2, signed a letter addressed to respondents 1 in these terms:

"Cawnpore, 14th July 1937.
Messrs. Madan Gopal Radheylal,
Naya Gunj, Cawnpore.
Dear Sirs,
Re. 800 tons toria seeds July, Karachi.

In continuation of the correspondence between us re: the above mentioned contract, we request you to pay us Rs 10 000 (rupees ten thousand only) to enable us to clear the consignment at Karachi and despatch the goods to Calcutta as instructed by you. We undertake to despatch the same as soon as possible and we shall draw on you at Calcutta in proportion of Rs. 1250 (rupees one thousand and two hundred fifty) for every hundred tons so as to adjust the said 10,000 rupees towards the price of the goods proportionately. Further we undertake to charge you commission at the rate of As. 8 per cent. and only actual expenses that we shall make in your account.

Should any dispute arise between us in respect of the contract in regard to delivery, despatch, payment, expenses, charges, etc., then the same shall be referred to the sole arbitration of Mr. S. Bhasin, Advocate, Cawnpore, under the Indian Arbitration Act, and the decision he will give shall be binding on us.

We hope you agree to the aforesaid terms and in token whereof you will write and confirm this letter along with a cheque for the sum of Rs. 10,000.

We are,

Yours very faithfully,
Savaldas Madhavdas.
S. M. Ruth.

Confirmed:
Goverdhandas Dasani.
Proprietor."

Paragraph 2 of the letter contains the submission clause in dispute. It is the case of respondent 2 that this submission clause is not subscribed to by any of the partners in respondent 2 firm; indeed, it is signed by the clerk of the second respondent's office at Cawnpore and by one Goverdhandas Dasani who has described himself as the proprietor of respondents 2, but who is in no way connected with the firm of respondent 2.

[3] Some nine or ten months later, Mr Bhasin acted as the arbitrator in pursuance of the alleged submission clause contained in the letter of 14 7-1937 upon an allegation made by respondent 1 that disputes had arisen in regard to short delivery of the contract goods, expenses charged by respondent 2, rebate on freight, insurance, interest and other matters.

[4] On 6-5-1938, one Mulchand, an employee of respondent 2 at Karachi, wrote to the arbitrator Mr Bhasin, informing him that their statement would be posted within three days. On 8-5-1938 a statement signed by Mulchand was sent to Mr Bhasin. On 19-5-1938 Madangopal Radheylal, respondent 1, wrote to Mr. Bhasin to fix a date of hearing after the first week of June 1938. On 19-5-1938, Mulchand requested Mr. Bhasin to send him a true copy of the letter dated 14-7-1937. On 23-5-1938 Mr. Bhasin wrote to respondents 2 that he was not in possession of the letter dated 14-7 1937.

[5] On 28-5-1938, Mr. Dasani writing from Sukkur to Mr. Bhasin asked him to adjourn the arbitration proceedings till 20-6-1938; meanwhile he requested Mr. Bhasin not to send any communication to the Karachi office as there was nobody competent to deal with the correspondence in the matter in his absence.

[6] On 8 6-1938, Messrs. Suganlal & Co., advocates of Karachi, wrote a letter to respondent 1 that a sum of Rs. 167-14-9 was due to respondent 2 in respect of the three contracts made in March and April 1937, and informed respondent 1 that in case they disputed their liability, respondent 2 nominated Lala Ruplal Shankerdas, managing partner of the firm of Shankerdas Ruplal of Karachi, as their arbitrator, and called upon respondent 1 to nominate their arbitrator who should be a member of the Karachi Indian Merchants' Association within seven days from the receipt of the letter.

[7] On 17-6-1938, respondent 1 replied to Messrs. Suganlal & Co, advocates of respondent 2, denying their liability and intimated to them that the submission clause in favour of two merchants of the Karachi Indian Merchants' Association had been modified and that the dispute was before the new arbitrator Mr. Bhasin, who had fixed the hearing of the case on 20-6-1938.

[8] On 20-6-1938, Messrs. Suganlal & Co. appeared before Mr. Bhasin and demurred to his jurisdiction. In Para 5 of the application which Messrs Suganlal & Co. filed before Mr. Bhasin, they set out, what were according to Messrs. Suganlal & Co, the true facts of the case. It was contended before the arbitrator that the privity of contract was between respondents 1 and 2, and not between the Cawnpore office of respondent 2 and respondent 1, and that the Cawnpore office of respondent 2 had no authority to refer any disputes to arbitration arising out of the contracts; that the alleged submission clause in the letter dated 14-7-1938, signed by Mr. Sunderdas and Mr. Dasani did not supersede the arbitration clause contained in cl. 15 of the three contracts made at Karachi in March and April 1937; that, in fact, arbitration proceedings were going on between respondents 1 and 2 at Karachi, pursuant to cl. 15 of the three contracts.

[9] Various other objections were taken, to which it is not necessary to refer. The main objection is that neither Mr. Sunderdas nor Mr. Dasani had any authority to refer any matters in dispute affecting the firm of respondent 2.

[10] Second statement was filed by Messrs. Suganlal & Co. before Mr. Bhasin on 4-7-1938 also under protest. On 19-7-1938 Mr. Bhasin informed Messrs. Suganlal & Co. that the arbitration proceedings were again fixed for 24-7-1938. Messrs. Suganlal & Co. pointed out to Mr. Bhasin that 24-7-1938 was a Sunday, and that the proceedings held on 24th of July would be void.

[11] On 22-7-1938, Messrs. Suganlal & Co., informed Mr. Bhasin that respondent 2 had filed a suit against respondent 1 at Karachi and that a notice had been ordered by the then Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Sind against respondent 1 for 4-8-1938 to show cause why an injunction should not issue to restrain Mr. Bhasin from proceeding with the arbitration.

[12] On 25-7-1938, however, Mr. Bhasin passed an award whereby he awarded a sum of rupees 8261-2-9 from respondent 2 to respondent 1. In due course, respondent 2 filed their objections to the award, and these are before me for disposal.

[13] The main ground on which I propose to set aside the award is that there has been no valid submission to arbitration in favour of Mr. Bhasin. Mr. Bhasin was examined on commission and his evidence has been brought on the record as Ex. 73. According to the evidence of Mr. Bhasin, he was told in July 1937 that there were contracts for turia seed between respondents 1 and 2, and that certain differences had arisen out of these contracts between them; this information was given to him, by Mr. Dasani, who was then at Cawnpore. Mr. Bhasin says that Mr. Dasani told him that he was the proprietor of the firm of Savaldas Madhavdas, respondent 2, and asked Mr. Bhasin to act as the sole arbitrator in the matter of disputes between respondents 1 and 2; Lala Radheylal of the firm of respondent 1 and Mr. Dasani met in his office and Lala Radheylal said that if all disputes between the parties were referred to arbitration immediately, he would make payments in respect of the three contracts. This was agreed to by Mr. Dasani, and according to Mr. Bhasin, Mr. Dasani gave to Lala Radheylal the letter dated 14-7-1937. Mr. Dasani and Lala Radheylal exchanged letters, the draft of which was dictated by Mr. Bhasin; after the two letters were exchanged, Lala Radheylal gave to Mr. Dasani a cheque for Rs. 10,000.

[14] It is clear from the evidence of Mr. Bhasin that it was Mr. Dasani who signed the letter dated 14-7-1937. All that Mr. Bhasin says is that Mr. Dasani, gave himself out as the proprietor of the firm of respondent 2. Mr. Bhasin has no personal knowledge of the capacity in which Mr. Dasani was acting or purporting to act.

[15] On the other hand, two partners of the firm of respondent 2, Madhavdas and Kanayalal, have given evidence before me and both have said that Mr Dasani had nothing to do with their firm; he was merely a friend of Kanayalal. Certain partnership deeds have been produced before me and these plainly show that Mr. Dasani was never a partner in the firm of respondent 2.

[16] I am satisfied from the evidence of Madhavdas and Kanayalal that Dasani had no connection with the firm of respondent 2 and that Sunderdas was only a clerk employed at Cawnpore for the purpose of securing orders, which were in their turn subject to confirmation by respondent 2 at Karachi.

[17] The question arises, whether the so-called submission clause contained in the letter of 14-7-1937 is one which can bind respondent 2?

[18] Sub-s. (2) of S. 19, Partnership Act, says:

"In the absence of any usage or custom of trade to the contrary, the implied authority of a partner does not empower him to—(a) submit a dispute relating to the business of the firm to arbitration . . . ."

[19] Now, so far as the three contracts which were made at Karachi in March and April 1937 are concerned, they contain a valid submission clause because the implied authority to refer the matter to arbitration is derived from the custom of trade in Karachi. But the submission clause contained in the letter dated 14-7-1937 signed by Mr. Sunderdas and Mr. Dasani and relied upon by respondent 1 is not a submission clause which has been subscribed to by a partner in the firm of respondent 2. It is a submission clause signed by one Sunderdas, a clerk in charge of the Cawnpore branch of respondent 2 and one Mr. Dasani a person wholly unconnected with respondent 2. It is clear from the evidence that neither Mr. Dasani nor Sunderdas had any authority from respondent 2 to refer any matters in dispute between respondents 1 and 2 to arbitration.

[20] Mr. Parmanand Thakurdas for respondent 1 has not led any evidence to show that Mr. Sunderdas or Mr. Dasani was a partner in the firm of respondent 2. The evidence led before me clearly shows that neither Mr. Sunderdas nor Mr. Dasani was a partner in the firm of respondent 2. Mr. Sunderdas and Mr. Dasani had no authority to refer any disputes between respondent 1 and respondent 2 to arbitration.

[21] Mr. Parmanand contends that while it is true that authority of Sunderdas and Mr. Dasani to refer disputes between respondents 1 and 2 to arbitration has not been proved, nevertheless respondent 2 has ratified the act of Sunderdas and Mr. Dasani as certain letters written by Mulchand an employee of respondent 2 would appear to indicate. On the evidence before me it is impossible to hold that all the three partners have ratified the so-called submission contained in the letter dated 14-7-1937.

[22] Section 196, Contract Act, deals with the subject of ratification; and it is plain that the person who can ratify is the person on whose behalf the act is done. In this case, the persons who could ratify the unauthorised act of Sunderdas and Mr. Dasani were the three partners constituting the firm of respondent 2. I can find nothing in the evidence to justify the conclusion that all the partners in the firm of respondent 2 have ratified the act of Mr. Sunderdas and Mr. Dasani.

[23] Mr. Parmanand for respondent 1 has argued from the letters written by Mulchand and the account filed by respondent 1 that at any rate the arrangement as regards payment for the goods has been assented to and given effect to by respondent 2. This arrangement refers to the payments of Rs. 10,000 by respondent 1 as a guarantee of good faith on their part before respondent 2 agreed to despatch the goods to Calcutta. I am inclined to accept the position that respondent 2 knew about the arrangement as regards the manner in which the goods were to be paid for and assented to it. But I am not satisfied that all the partners in respondent 2 firm had knowledge of the submission clause as contained in the letter dated 14-7-1937 and had assented to it. Indeed, the correspondence shows that respondent 2 called upon Mr. Bhasin to send them a certified copy of the letter dated 14-7-1937; Mr. Bhasin however replied that the letter was not in his possession. It is true that from one of the letters written by Mulchand at Karachi, it would appear that Mulchand knew that Mr. Bhasin was acting as an arbitrator. But Mulchand's knowledge cannot be called ratification by all the partners in the firm of respondent 2. Far from there being any ratification on their part, respondent 2, engaged Messrs. Suganlal & Co., to protest against the arbitration proceedings before Mr. Bhasin.

[24] Mr. Parmanand has next contended that assuming, there was no ratification by all the partners of respondent 2 of the unauthorised act of Mr. Sunderdas and Mr. Dasani, there is evidence to show that Kanayalal, one of the partners, at any rate, had ratified the unauthorised act of Sunderdas and Mr. Dasani. Mr. Parmanand has drawn my attention to the evidence of Madhavdas, a partner in the firm of respondent 2, where Madhavdas has stated that in 1937-38 Kanayalal was in Karachi. It is true Kanayalal has stated in his evidence that he left Karachi in the end of August 1937. But Mr. Parmanand is justified in relying upon the admission of Madhavdas that Kanayalal was in Karachi in 1937-38. Madhavdas has also admitted that letters written by Mulchand to respondent 1 or Mr. Bhasin must have been written under instructions from Mr. Kanayalal who was then in Karachi. I am inclined to hold upon this evidence that Kanayalal knew of the arrangement referred to in para. 1 of the letter written on 14-7-1937, as also the submission clause contained in the same letter. Upon this evidence Mr. Parmanand contends that assuming respondent 2 as a firm is not bound by the submission clause, Kanayalal must be held bound by reason of his having ratified the unauthorised act of Mr. Sunderdas and Mr. Dasani.

[25] The difficulty in accepting Mr. Parmanand's contention for the purpose of holding Kanayalal liable under the award is that the award has been made by Mr. Bhasin against the firm of respondent 2 and not against any individual member of the firm. The reference in this case was under the Arbitration Act of 1899, and the procedure to be followed on the making of an award under the Arbitration Act of 1899 is laid down in S. 11 and the following sections. After an award has been filed in Court under S. 11, unless the Court remits it under S. 13, or sets it aside under S. 14 of the Act of 1899, it is enforceable as if it were a decree of the Court. It is to be observed that in the Arbitration Act of 1899, there is no provision analogous to S. 15, Arbitration Act of 1940, where power is given to a Court to modify or correct an award. Under the Arbitration Act of 1899 the powers of Court are limited to remitting the award, setting it aside or enforcing it as if it were a decree. The award in this case being against the firm of respondent 2, it is to be enforced as a decree against respondent 2 as a firm if it is not set aside. If it is set aside, the question of enforcing the award as a decree does not arise. There is no provision, as far as I can see, in the Arbitration Act of 1899 which enables a Court to enforce the award as a decree against an individual member of the firm when the award is made against the firm as a whole.

[26] Mr. Parmanand has drawn my attention to Lindley on "Partnership," Edn. 10, at p. 183, where it is stated that "the partner actually referring the dispute is, however, himself bound by the award," and the authority cited is (1677) 2 Mod. 227.[1] On referring to the case itself, I find it was a case where an action was brought on the case for non-performance of an award. The defendant in that case had, on behalf of himself and his partner, referred all differences and controversies between the plaintiff and them to arbitrators, and promised to perform their award; the award was that all suits which are prosecuted by the plaintiff against the defendant shall cease, and that he shall pay the plaintiff a certain sum of money. For non-payment, action was brought upon this special declaration, to which the defendant demurred. The Court held that "the defendant may undertake for his partner, and having engaged for him, and promised that he should perform the award on his part (notwithstanding the partner is not bound so to do), yet if he refuses, it is a breach of the defendant's promise."

The action in (1677) 2 Mod. 227[1] was based upon the breach of the defendant's undertaking. This is made clear in Vol. II of the English and Empire Digest at p. 328, where in para. 118, referring to the case in (1677) 2 Mod. 227=86 E. R. 1041,[1] it is stated:

"If one of two partners sign an arbitration bond 'for himself and partner', when the partner is not a party to the arbitration, the non-signing partner is not bound to perform the award, but his failure to do so is a breach of the signing partner's promise."

(1677) 2 Mod. 227[1] is therefore not an authority for the proposition that, where an award has been passed against a firm, which was not a party to a reference to arbitration, the ratifying partner can be held liable personally, although the award is set aside against the firm.

[27] Mr. Parmanand has also relied upon the case in A. I. R. 1932 Bom. 516,[2] but this case has no application to the facts before me. In the Bombay case no objections to the award were filed. A decree was passed in terms of the award, and under the provisions of O. 21, R. 50, Civil P. C., the liability of partners not served in the suit was to be determined by the executing Court. In the present case, as I am setting aside the award on the ground that the submission to arbitration was unauthorised and that there has been no ratification of the unauthorised submission by all the partners of the firm, the award based upon such a reference cannot be enforced as a decree against one of the partners who has ratified the unauthorised submission.

[28] I would accordingly set aside the award and order that it be struck off the file. Respondent 2 will get costs of their objections from respondent 1.

First Appeal No. 5 of 1942, Decided on 12-5-1947, from decision of 1st Class Sub-Judge, Shikarpur, D/- 29-11-1941.

Mahomedan law — Cosharers — Alienation by one cosharer of part of property — Suit by vendee for adjusting equities between himself and his vendor in regard to property not alienated to him — Maintainability.

Where a Muslim cosharer alienates a part only, of the property held in co-ownership without authority of his other cosharer, the vendee is not entitled to adjustment of equities in respect of other property held in co-ownership which has not been alienated to him by his vendor. [Para 9]

The question of adjustment of equities between the vendor and vendee upon a suit by a Muslim cosharer for partition of the entire property held in co-ownership might properly arise but a vendee cannot compel him to sue for a general partition, for the purpose of adjusting equities between the cosharer vendor and himself, much less can he institute a suit for the sole purpose of adjusting equities between himself and his Muslim cosharer vendor in regard to property which has not been alienated to him: Case law discussed. [Paras 12, 13]

Kimatrai Bhojraj — for Appellants.

Khanchand Gopaldas — for Respondents.

Thadani J. — This is an appeal from the decision of the learned First Class Subordinate Judge, Shikarpur, in Suit No. 57 of 1939, in which he dismissed the plaintiff-appellants' suit with costs. It appears that the appellants had purchased some agricultural property from one Bakhshokhan and Hajikhan, sons of one Nathokhan, by several deeds. The property shown in List A attached to the plaint was sold in its entirety to the appellants; as regards the property in List B, an undivided twelve annas share was sold to them. Bakhshokhan and Hajikhan had stated in the sale-deeds that the property sold to the appellants was their exclusive property.

[2] In 1930, heirs of Nathokhan filed Suit No. 78 of 1930 in the Subordinate Civil Court of Shikarpur in which they claimed the property included in Lists A and B in the present suit, as belonging to Nathokhan, and disputed the right of Bakhshokhan and Hajikhan to alienate their share in the property. The appellants were joined as defendants in that suit, and they raised a number of defences including limitation and adverse possession. Their main defence, however, was that a suit by the heirs of the deceased Nathokhan for a partial partition was incompetent and that the entire property of the deceased Nathokhan should have been made available for a general partition. The trial Court on the authority of the Full Bench decision of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Sind in 16 S. L. R. 133[1] negatived the appellants' contention and found that the property involved in Suit No. 78/1930 was the property of the deceased Nathokhan, and that the shares of the plaintiffs in that suit could not be alienated by Hajikhan and Bakhshokhan. An appeal preferred against the judgment and decree passed in Suit No. 78/1930 was dismissed by this Court.

[3] The appellants in the present suit seek to have a general partition effected in the other properties of Nathokhan which were not alienated by Hajikhan and Bakhshokhan. Those properties are mentioned in Lists C, D and E, in the present suit. The respondents resisted the appellants' suit on the ground that they had no right to sue; that the suit was barred by the decree in Suit No. 78/1930; that so far as the property mentioned in Lists C, D and E is concerned, it has not been sold to the appellants by Bakhshokhan and Hajikhan; that the appellants are, therefore, not entitled to a declaration and partition as claimed by them.

[4] Upon the pleadings, the trial Court passed the following issues:

"(1) Have the plaintiffs a right to sue or not? (2) Is the suit not in proper form? (3) Is the suit barred by decree in Case No. 78 of 1930, of the First Class Subordinate Court, Shikarpur? (4) Are the plaintiffs estopped from bringing this suit? (5) Was the property shown in the plaint left by Bakhshokhan and Hajikhan? (6) Has any property been sold by Bakhshokhan and Hajikhan? (7) Are the facts stated in paras. 5, 6 and 7 of the plaint true? If so, what is the consequence? (8) Are the plaintiffs entitled to the declaration as prayed for in para. 8 of the plaint or to partition as prayed for in para. 9 of the plaint? (9) What should the decree be?

[5] The learned advocate for the appellants has challenged the findings of the trial Court on all the issues except Issue 6, in regard to which there is no dispute between the parties, as it is common ground that the property mentioned in Lists A and B only had been alienated by Bakhshokhan and Hajikhan to the appellants. But it is contended that the properties mentioned in Lists C, D and E which were not alienated by Hajikhan and Bakhshokhan, should be made available for a general partition so as to give effect to equities between the vendors Bakhshokhan and Hajikhan and the vendee-appellants, in view of the fact that in Suit No. 78/1930 the appellants' contention for general partition was negatived.

[6] Mr. Kimatrai concedes that his clients cannot obtain a partition decree in respect of the properties mentioned in Lists A and B, as they were the subject-matter of a partition in Suit No. 78/1930 and which resulted in a decree for partition. This position has been conceded in para. 15 (a) of the plaint. Paragraph 15 (a) of the plaint reads as follows:

"That the Court be pleased to declare that the decree in Suit No. 78 of 1930 in favour of the defendants (Nos. 18 to 40) will be sufficiently and adequately satisfied both in quantity and value, without touching the plaintiffs in their purchased property and disturbing them in any way as directed in that decree from the property shown in Schs. C, D and E and share of the defendants in Sch. E."

Both in the lower Court and before us, the relief claimed in para. 15 (a) of the plaint was given up. Mr. Kimatrai, however, relies upon cl. (b) of para. 15 of the plaint which reads as follows:

"That the Court be pleased to direct the partition of the entire property comprised in Schs. A to E in the manner and method prescribed above to prevent the possibility of the plaintiffs' property shown in Sch. A and their share in property in Sch. E, being touched in any way and to give such other relief as the justice and equity warrant and justify."

We cannot see how, when the relief claimed in cl. (a) of para. 15 has been abandoned, the relief contained in cl. (b) can be granted. The appellants seek to have partition effected not only of the properties mentioned in the Lists C, D and E, but also of the properties mentioned in Lists A and B. The relief claimed in cl. (b) of para. 15 is plainly dependant upon the relief claimed in cl. (a) of para. 15. If no declaration can be given with respect to properties mentioned in Lists A and B as conceded by the appellants' advocate, the question of directing a partition of the properties mentioned in Lists A and B in our opinion does not arise.

[8] Before the appellants can claim partition of the properties, described in Lists C, D and E they must prove that they are cosharers. But it is the case of the appellants that they have no share in these properties. If the appellants have no legal right to claim partition of the properties mentioned in Lists C, D and E, we fail to see how they can ask the Court to make them available for the purpose of giving effect to what the appellants call equities between themselves and their vendors Bakhshokhan and Hajikhan. We shall presently consider the cases which Mr. Kimatrai has cited before us in support of his contention.

[9] We are unable to agree with the generality of the proposition that even when no legal right exists in a vendee to claim partition from his vendor, a vendee can claim a partition of the properties belonging to his vendor and the vendor's cosharers by reason of the fact that a vendee's rights have been affected by a partition decreed upon a suit for partition instituted by the cosharers of the vendor in respect of that property only which has been alienated by the vendor to the vendee without authorization of his cosharers. We take the view that where a Muslim cosharer alienates a part only of the property held in co-ownership without authority of his other cosharer, the vendee is not entitled to adjustment of equities in respect of other property held in co-ownership which has not been alienated to him by his vendor; and we think this is in conformity with the personal law of the Muslims relating to succession.

[10] Under the Muhammadan law, a Muslim cosharer is upon succession entitled to a specific share in every fraction of the estate, and applying the law to the facts before us, it is plain that in the properties mentioned in Lists C, D and E, the heirs of Nathokhan are cosharers with numbers mentioned therein. The heirs of Nathokhan have not claimed partition of the property in Lists C, D and E. If the appellants were to succeed in obtaining partition of the properties mentioned in Lists C, D and E on the equitable doctrine of adjustment of equities between themselves and their vendors Bakhshokhan and Hajikhan, the heirs of Nathokhan, would still retain their share in every fraction of the properties decreed in favour of the appellants. The result would be that the vendees' rights upon the adjustment claimed by them would be subject to the legal rights of the cosharers of their vendors, a situation entirely alien to property rights of Muslims.

[11] In 16 S. L. R. 133,[1] a Full Bench of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Sind, on the following question referred to it, namely:

"Whether a cosharer under the Muhammadan law suing to recover his share in a portion of his ancestral estate wrongfully alienated by another cosharer to a stranger, who is in possession, is required to seek for partition of the whole estate, and if not, whether a suit for partition of the portion alienated is competent."

answered the first part in the negative, and the second part in the affirmative. Kincaid J. C. in delivering the judgment of the Full Bench observed (page 135):

"The difficulty in deciding a question of this kind lies chiefly in the frequency with which English Judges have applied to suits between Mussalmans the rules that appertain to Hindu co-parcenaries."

It appears that in 1 S. L. R. 133,[2] Crouch A. J. C. a Judge of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Sind, had observed:

"We see no reason for holding that the position of a Muhammadan plaintiff who claims partial partition is any stronger than that of a Hindu plaintiff."

And in a Bombay case 23 Bom. 188,[3] Parsons J. had stated that in the Bombay Presidency a suit for partition of an inheritance by Mussalmans was hardly distinguishable from a partition suit by Hindus. The Full Bench of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Sind did not accept the view of Parsons J. or Crouch A. J. C. and confined the examination of those cases only in which joint Hindu families were not involved, and Kincaid J. C. referred to the case in 28 I. C. 895,[4] with approval.

[12] It may be conceded that the question of adjustment of equities between the vendor and vendee upon a suit by a Muslim cosharer for partition of the entire property held in co-ownership might properly arise, but we cannot accept the position that, while a Muslim cosharer elects to sue for partition of some of the properties only held in co-ownership, a vendee can compel him to sue for a general partition, for the purpose of adjusting equities between the cosharer-vendor and himself. If Mr. Kimatrai's contention were to prevail, it would put fetters upon what this Court in Second Appeal No. 64 of 1942,[5] has held to be an unfettered right of a Muslim cosharer to claim partition of some of the properties only held in co-ownership, while retaining his co-ownership in the remaining properties.

[13] If, then, a vendee cannot require a Muslim cosharer to sue for a general partition, much less can he institute a suit for the sole purpose of adjusting equities between himself and his Muslim cosharer-vendor in regard to property which has not been alienated to him, as is sought to be done in the case before us.

[14] The analogy of a case where a vendee-defendant in a suit for partition by a Hindu co-parcener in respect of some of the co-parcenary properties only has been relegated to a suit for the purpose of adjusting equities between the coparcener vendor and the vendee is quite inapplicable to the case of a Muslim cosharer-vendor. As was observed by Kennedy A. J. C. in 16 S. L. R. 133[1] at page 142:

". . . . In the case of Muhammadans who held the estate before division as tenants-in-common, there is sufficient authority for the proposition that B may ask for separate partition of the part of the estate improperly alienated. This seems to follow from the authorities quoted. A Muhammadan heir is not a coparcener. He has not merely a right to acquire by partition a share in a defined property which share is a unascertained till partition is effected, but a right to a defined and immediate share in each portion of the estate, and if any portion of the estate is, in any case, marked off and divided from the rest of the estate, he has a right to an immediate share in that portion."

[15] We think the Full Bench decision of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Sind in 16 S. L. R. 133,[1] is against the contention of the appellants that in a suit by a Muslim cosharer for partition against his cosharers and vendee relating to the property alienated by a cosharer, the vendee can claim a general partition of all the properties belonging to the Muslim cosharers so as to have the question of adjustment of equities between himself and his Muslim co-sharer-vendors decided.

[16] Mr. Kimatrai for the appellants has relied upon a decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in 3 Cal. 198,[6] and two other cases 45 Mad. 449[7] and 50 Mad. 320,[8] all of which were cases in which Hindu co-parcenary properties were involved.

[17] Mr. Kimatrai has relied upon certain observations of Rangnekar J. in A. I. R. 1939 Bom. 40,[9] but we do not think they have any application to the facts before us. The proposition that in effecting partition of joint property between cosharers and an alienee from one or some of them, equity requires that partition should be so effected as not to prejudice the latter, may for the purposes of this appeal be conceded. But as the learned trial Judge has observed, the question of equities as between the cosharer-vendors and the appellant vendees was considered in Suit No. 78/1930, and no further question of the adjustment of equities arises in the present suit, the more so as none of the properties mentioned in Lists C, D and E has been alienated to the appellants. Nor do we think the principle enunciated in I. L. R. (1939) Kar. 597,[10] governs the facts before us.

[18] We agree with the learned trial Judge that the suit as framed did not lie, the appellants having no right, title or interest in the properties described in Lists C, D and E, and that the decision in Suit No. 78/1930 operated as res judicata in so far as it related to properties mentioned in Lists A and B, and that as the appellants are not the alienees of any of the properties described in Lists C, D and E, they have no right to claim adjustment of equities arising out of the sale of properties mentioned in Lists A and B, having regard to the rights of Muslim cosharers in property held in co-ownership. In the result we dismiss the appeal with costs.

Madhavdas Bhagat — for Applicant.

O'Sullivan J.—This is an application under S. 32, Karachi Small Causes Court Act questioning the legality of an order made by the Chief Judge of the Small Causes Court, Karachi, under the Sind Rent Control (Residential Premises) Order, 1942.

[2] The facts are simple, but the point raised is of considerable interest. The opponent Hassanand Radhakrishin Batheja, a landlord, instituted proceedings in the Court of the Small Causes, Karachi, under S. 18, Karachi Small Causes Court Act to eject a tenant, Kartarsing, the applicant.

[3] Under cl. 10 of the Sind (Residential Premises) Control Order, 1942, which is in the nature of emergency legislation, no order for ejectment may be made unless, inter alia, a landlord has obtained a certificate from the Rent Controller in accordance with that section.

[4] On 30th April 1946, the opponent, applied to the Rent Controller for the necessary certificate and this was granted on 21st June 1946. Under cl. 12 of the Rent Control Order, as it stood on 30th April 1946, when the certificate was granted, an appeal lay to the Collector against the order of the Controller granting the certificate and the decision of the Collector was final.

[5] On 15th July 1946, the applicant filed an appeal under cl. 12 to the Collector. Before the Collector decided that appeal, the opponent on 24th August 1946 filed ejectment proceedings in the Court of the Karachi Small Causes. On 9th September 1946, while the proceedings were pending, the Collector allowed the appeal and set aside the order of the Rent Controller.

[6] On 22nd August 1946, while the proceedings in the Karachi Small Causes Court were still pending, the Rent Control Order was amended by the introduction of a provision empowering the Provincial Government to modify, annul or reverse the order of the Collector. This was brought about by substituting for the original cl. 12 of the Rent Control Order, cls. 12, 13 and 14. Under the amendment, cl. 12 provided for appeal to the Collector and cl. 13, which reads as follows, provided for revision by the Provincial Government :

"The Provincial Government may call for and examine the record of any enquiry made or proceeding held by the Collector or the Controller, for the purpose of satisfying itself as to the legality or propriety of any decision or order made thereon, and as to the regularity of the proceedings. If in any case, it shall appear to the Provincial Government that any decision or order or proceeding so called for should be modified, annulled or reversed, it may pass such order thereon as it deems fit."

The new cl. 14 provided that orders under cls. 12 and 13 should be final to the extent laid down.

[7] The opponent thereupon made a revision application to the Provincial Government under the amended order and on 16th September 1946, Government set aside the order of the Collector and restored the order to the Rent Controller.

[8] On 1st November 1946, the learned Chief Judge, Karachi Small Causes Court, dismissed the objections of the applicant, and issued a writ for possession in favour of the landlord opponent, on the basis of the order of Government restoring the certificate of the Rent Controller.

[9] It is the contention of Mr. Madhawdas, who appears on behalf of the applicant and who has argued this matter with considerable ability, that the order of Government could not properly be taken into consideration in the ejectment proceedings. It is his contention that statutes cannot be interpreted as operating retrospectively in the absence of express provision to that effect, and that when the law is altered during the pendency of any action, the rights of the parties must be decided in accordance with the law as it existed when that action began.

[10] Therefore, according to Mr. Madhavdas, the Rent Controller, having been first approached on 30th April 1946 under the provisions of the then Rent Control Order as unamended and which clothed the decision of the Collector with finality, the order of the Collector must remain unaffected by the subsequent amendment providing for revision to the Provincial Government.

[11] We consider that Mr. Madhawdas' contentions are well founded. The principles to which he has referred are stated in the leading case of 1905 A. C. 369,[1] as follows :

"As regards the general principles applicable to the case there was no controversy. On the one hand, it was not disputed that if the matter in question be a matter of procedure only, the petition is well founded. On the other hand, if it be more than a matter of procedure, if it touches a right in existence at the passing of the Act, it was conceded that, in accordance with a long line of authorities extending from the time of Lord Coke to the present day, the appellants would be entitled to succeed. The Judiciary Act is not retrospective by express enactment or by necessary intendment. And, therefore, the only question is, was the appeal to His Majesty in Council a right vested in the appellants at the date of the passing of the Act, or was it a mere matter of procedure ? It seems to their Lordships that the question does not admit of doubt. To deprive a suitor in a pending action of an appeal to a superior tribunal which belonged to him as of right is a very different thing from regulating procedure. In principle, their Lordships see no difference between abolishing an appeal altogether and transferring the appeal to a new tribunal. In either case there is an interference with existing rights contrary to the well-known general principle that statutes are not to be held to act retrospectively unless a clear intention to that effect is maintained."

There was some discussion as to whether these principles were limited merely to something in the nature of judicial proceedings, but Mr. Madhawdas has referred us to a decision of the Privy Council, A. I. R. 1927 P. C. 97,[2] in which the facts are very close and which involve certain proceedings under the Calcutta Rent Act. In that case the appellant who was a tenant had taken certain action under the Act for the fixation of a reasonable rent. The rent was duly fixed by the Controller but the tenant being dissatisfied with the Controller's decision, filed an appeal to the President of the Improvement Committee, to whom, under the Act, an appeal lay. Owing to stress of business the appeal was undecided by the President for a considerable time, and during that period two subsequent enactments were passed which had the effect of terminating his powers. In view of these changes, the President, when he eventually heard the appeal, refused to dispose of it on the ground that his powers had then terminated. Against this decision a revision application was made to the Calcutta High Court and decided against the tenant. On appeal to the Privy Council, on the principles already enunciated above, their Lordships decided that the President of the Improvement Tribunal was bound to exercise his jurisdiction and remitted the proceedings to him for this purpose. They pointed out that the Act applied as at the time the parties begin to move under it, and that this was before the powers of the President were terminated.

[12] Another decision of the Privy Council which has afforded us guidance is A. I. R. 1927 P. C. 212.[3] In that case their Lordships were considering the effect of a certain amendment to the Income-tax Act made in 1926, and their Lordships said on this point :

"But a further point remains. Is there under this section any appeal at all from an order of the High Court made before the Act of 1926 came into force ?

The principle which their Lordships must apply in dealing with this matter has been authoritatively enunciated by the Board in 1905 A. C. 369,[1] where it is in effect laid down that, while provisions of a statute dealing merely with matters of procedure may properly, unless that construction be textually inadmissible, have retrospective effect attributed to them, provisions which touch a right in existence at the passing of the statute are not to be applied retrospectively in absence of express enactment or necessary intendment. Their Lordships can have no doubt that provisions which, if applied retrospectively, would deprive of their existing finality orders, which, when the statute came into force, were final, are provisions which touch existing rights. Accordingly, if the section now in question is to apply to orders final at the date when it came into force, it must be clearly so provided. Their Lordships cannot find in the section even an indication to that effect."

[13] Two other cases throw some light upon this matter. We would refer in this connection to 32 Bom. 337.[4] Under the Mamlatdars' Courts Act of 1906, the Collector had been given a power of revision very similar to that provided for the Provincial Government under the Amended Sind Rent Control Order, and it was held by the Bombay High Court that in relation to pending proceedings commenced before the coming into operation of that Act, having regard to the words of the Bombay General Clauses Act, the Collector had no jurisdiction, and that to hold otherwise would be to affect the legal proceedings in respect of a right which had accrued under the old Mamlatdars' Courts Act of 1876.

[14] The other case is A. I. R. 1926 Rang. 205,[5] which relates to proceedings under the Rangoon Rent Act. In that case after referring to the observations of Lord Macnaghten in 1905 A. C. 369,[1] their Lordships said :

"It has been urged that this case is distinguishable from the present inasmuch as in that case it was sought to take away the vested right of the subject to appeal to the King in Council, while in the case before us a remedy by way of appeal is given and at the time it was given neither party could tell to whose advantage this remedy might accrue."

And the judgment went on to point out that there was no distinction in principle between the two cases.

[15] We cannot see there is any escape from the conclusion that recourse having been had by the opponent to the Rent Controller on 30th April 1946 under the provisions of the Sind Rent Control Order and such order providing finality for the decision of the Collector, the subsequent amendment providing for revision to the Provincial Government could not in any way render inconclusive the order of the Collector. In other words, neither party were entitled to resort to revision since the amendment providing for revision had been introduced subsequent to the time when the opponent began to move under the Rent Control Order.

[16] In 1905 A. C. 369,[1] it was emphasised that a clear distinction must be drawn between a matter of procedure only and a substantive right. There is no doubt that in this case the right to appeal to the Collector was a substantive right and as we have stated, the order of the Collector was, under the Control Order as unamended, final. Even if it be assumed for the purpose of argument that when the opponent resorted in the first instance on 30th April 1946 to the Controller for a certificate, it was a matter of procedure only, the principles set out above still apply, because on 15th July 1946 when the applicant was entitled to and did exercise his right of appeal which is a substantive right, the amendment had not come into force. This, as we have stated, came into force on 22nd August 1946.

[17] Mr. Tikamdas, who appears on behalf of the opponent, has been unable to convince us that the order of the learned Judge was correct. He commenced by suggesting that the order of the Collector was not a valid order because it had not been signed by him. In the first place the original document is not before us and this is not a matter which the opponent appears ever to have raised before the Small Causes Court, and in the second place in the very order upon which the opponent relies, that passed by the Local Government, the order reversed is referred to as the order of the Collector of Karachi.

[18] We do not therefore think that this is a point which we can go into in revision at all.

[19] In the result, we consider the applicant must succeed. We set aside the order of the learned Chief Judge of the Karachi Small Causes Court and allow costs throughout to the applicant.

Civil Revn. Appln. No. 93 of 1946, Decided on 25-4-1947.

Sind Residential Premises Control Order (1942), Cl. 12 (before amendment of 1946) — Rent Controller by one order granting two separate ejectment certificates against two tenants — Appeal by one tenant only—Effect on tenant not appealing.

Under the Sind Rent Control Order, separate premises come within the definition of a "house" and a separate certificate is required in respect of each of such premises. Where the Rent Controller makes one order against two tenants but grants separate ejectment certificates in that order in respect of each of the premises there is a separate cause of action in respect of each of the premises and if one of the tenants appeals to the Collector and the Collector cancels the Controller's order it cannot be said that there is no certificate in existence in the landlord's favour even in regard to the premises occupied by the other tenant who has not appealed.

L. L. Thacker — for Applicant.
Tikamdas Wadhumal — for Opponent.

O'Sullivan J. — This is a revision application connected with the Revision Appln. No. 92 of 1946,[1] dealt with and disposed of on the 22nd instant. The present applicant did not file an appeal to the Collector against the Rent Controller's order, but it is nevertheless contended on his behalf that he is entitled to succeed in the same way as the applicant in Revision Application No. 92 of 1946[1] on the ground that the Collector has cancelled the order in its entirety, and there is no certificate in existence in the opponent's favour even in regard to the premises occupied by him.

[2] In developing his argument, Mr. Thacker, who has no doubt given considerable thought to the points put forward, has pointed out that the Rent Controller made one consolidated order, Ex. 4, in the previous application (No. 92 of 1946),[1] and that in that order he referred to the present applicant and the applicant in Revision Application No. 92 of 1946,[1] as opponents 1 and 2, and further that the landlord had put forward a common ground for wanting both the premises in question, and that the landlord's application for a certificate was dealt with on that basis. Mr. Thacker further contended that the analogy of an appeal against a decree in a civil suit applies, and that although only one defendent may succeed in setting aside a decree, other defendants who have not appealed are entitled to take advantage of the appellate Court's order reversing the original decree.

[3] We have given this matter our consideration, and while having every sympathy with Mr. Thacker's client, who we have no doubt whatever has genuine and considerable difficulty in obtaining alternative premises, and while the landlord's grounds for wanting the premises do not appear prima facie very convincing, we cannot agree with Mr. Thacker's argument as to the analogy of civil proceedings.

[4] Under the Sind Rent Control Order, separate premises of this kind come within the definition of a "house" and a separate certificate is required in respect of each of such premises, and, therefore, in essence, there is a separate cause of action or a separate situation arises in respect of each separate set of premises. There is no one common cause of action as in the case of a suit. It is clear from the Rent Controller's Order that although the grounds given by the landlord for wanting the premises are the same in each case, he has nevertheless dealt with each case separately in his order, repeating each ground in each instance, and dealt with each case on a separate basis, and in the conclusion of his order he has granted separate certificates in respect of each of the premises. The final part of his order reads :

"I, therefore, certify that the request of the applicant is reasonable and bona fide, and accordingly grant the ejectment certificates applied for."

It is unfortunate that the applicant did not appeal, but since he did not, we cannot see that we would be justified in saying that there is no certificate in existence so far as the premises occupied by him are concerned. We must, therefore, disallow this revision application.

[5] In view of the difficulties of obtaining premises, we might have considered postponing this order for a reasonable time, but Mr. Tikamdas on behalf of the landlord has endeavoured to meet the situation by undertaking that no action will be taken to eject the applicant for at least three months from this date, and this undertaking is accepted.

[6] The application is dismissed with no order as to costs.

(a) Bombay Local Fund Audit Act (25 [XXV] of 1930), S. 13 (a)—Application under, to Chief Court —Maintainability — Sind Courts Act (7 [VII] of 1926), Ss. 8 and 22.

If S. 8 and S. 22 (1) and (2) of Sind Courts Act, are read together it is manifest that the Chief Court of Sind is not a District Court. Hence the Chief Court of Sind has no jurisdiction to entertain an application under S. 13 (a), Bombay Local Fund Audit Act, 1930.

Khanchand Gopaldas — for Applicant.

Balkrishna H. Lulla, Asst. Government Pleader — for the Crown.

Order. — This is an application by one Muhammad Usman Sumro under S. 13 (a), Bombay Audit Act, 1930, arising out of a surcharge made against him by the Revenue Commissioner-in-Sind in the sum of Rs. 484 in the matter of the construction of a road between Gujo Shah Hoosein—Khaiki and Ghulamullah.

[2] A preliminary objection has been taken by Mr. Lulla, for the Province of Sind, as to the jurisdiction of this Court to entertain the application. In my opinion the preliminary objection must prevail, as this Court is not a District Court for the purpose of an application under the Bombay Audit Act of 1930.

[3] Section 3, Sind Courts Act, 7 [VII] of 1926, lays down:

"On and from the commencement of this Act (Sind Courts Act, 1926), there shall be established for Sind a Chief Court hereinafter referred to as 'the Chief Court'."

Section 4 says:

"The Chief Court shall consist of a Chief Judge and other Judges."

Under S. 8:

"The Chief Court shall be the highest civil Court of appeal and revision and the highest Court of criminal appeal and revision for Sind and the principal civil Court of original jurisdiction for the civil district of Karachi . . ."

[4] Section 14 of the same Act deals with appeals from orders and decrees passed by a single Judge of this Court in the exercise of his original civil jurisdiction.

[5] The subject "District Courts" is dealt with in S. 21 and succeeding sections. Section 21 reads thus:

"For the purposes of this Act the Governor in Council may by notification divide Sind into civil districts and fix the limits of such civil districts and determine the headquarters of each such district. . . ."

Section 22 provides:

"(1) There shall be in each civil district other than that of Karachi, a District Court and the Governor in Council shall appoint a District Judge to each such Court.

(2) The District Court shall be the Principal Court of original civil jurisdiction in the civil district."

[6] It is significant that in S. 22 (1) there is an express provision for establishing a District Court in all the districts in Sind, except the district of Karachi, and sub-s. (2) defines "District Court" as the "principal Court of original civil jurisdiction in the civil district." If S. 8 and subss. (1) and (2) of S. 22, Sind Courts Act, 1926, are read together, it is manifest that the Chief Court of Sind is not a District Court.

[7] I had occasion to deal with this aspect of the case in I. L. R. (1946) Kar. 164,[1] in a matter arising out of S. 19, Bombay Local Boards Act, 6 [VI] of 1923. It is true the question involved in that case was whether a Judge of this Court was a District Judge, but the reasons which I gave for taking the view that a Judge of this Court is not a District Judge, apply in my opinion to the facts of this case.

[8] Mr. Khanchand for the applicant contends that as there is a civil district of Karachi, and the Chief Court of Sind exercises original civil jurisdiction for the civil district of Karachi, it is a District Court within the meaning of S. 2 (4), Civil P. C. I am unable to agree with this contention because if this Court is a District Court for the purposes of the Civil Procedure Code, all appeals from decisions passed by a single Judge of this Court would lie to the High Court under the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code. But the right of appeal from an order or decree of a single Judge of this Court is not governed by the Civil Procedure Code; it is governed by S. 14, Sind Courts Act, 1926.

[9] Mr. Khanchand has contended that under S. 9, Sind Courts Act, each Judge of this Court sitting singly is a Court subordinate to the Chief Court. I am unable to agree with this contention. Section 9, in my opinion, refers to the subordination of subordinate Courts (if any) in the civil district of Karachi, to the Chief Court. A Judge of this Court sitting singly is not subordinate to the Chief Court, and the right of appeal is not governed by S. 9, but by S. 14, Sind Courts Act.

[10] In I. L. R. (1946) Kar. 164,[1] I took the view that sub-s. (1) of S. 22, Sind Courts Act, expressly excludes the civil district of Karachi and makes no provision for the appointment of a District Judge for the civil district of Karachi. When S. 8, Sind Courts Act, is read with S. 22 (2) of the same Act, it means that without being a District Court in terms of S. 22, the Chief Court of Sind shall also be the principal civil Court of original jurisdiction. It does not mean that because the Chief Court is the principal civil Court of original jurisdiction for the civil district of Karachi, it is a district Court within the meaning of S. 22.

[11] Mr. Khanchand rightly contends that in I.L.R. (1946) Kar. 164[1] the question of the interpretation of S. 2 (4), Civil P. C., did not arise and was not considered. I propose therefore, to consider the question now whether this Court is a "district Court" within the meaning of S. 2 (4), Civil P. C. In my opinion, it is not. Section 2, cl. (4), Civil P. C., says:

"District means the local limits of the jurisdiction of a principal civil Court of original jurisdiction (hereinafter called a 'District Court') and includes the local limits of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of a High Court."

[12] It is not disputed that this Court is a High Court. But Mr. Khanchand contends that as under S. 8, Sind Courts Act, 1926, the Chief Court of Sind is the Principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction for the civil district of Karachi, it is also a district Court within the meaning of S. 2 (4), Civil P. C. But, as I have pointed out before, if this Court is a district Court, when exercising its original civil jurisdiction, by reason of S. 2 (4), Civil P. C., the right of appeal would also be governed by the Code of Civil Procedure from a decision of a single Judge of this Court. In view of S. 14, Sind Courts Act, 1926, however, I do not think such an interpretation is permissible.

[13] In A. I. R. 1927 Cal. 290,[2] Rankin C. J. had occasion to consider the meaning of the word "District" in the Civil Procedure Code, with reference to the ordinary civil jurisdiction of a High Court. Rankin C. J. referring to the case in 26 Cal. 133,[3] observed:

"Speaking for myself and bearing in mind the terms also of S. 3, Civil P. C., I decline altogether to hold that a learned Judge of the original side is Court subordinate to the High Court. He is the High Court, and, in my judgment, we would be going contrary to authorities and upsetting well-settled principles if we entertained the present application."

[14] The observations of Rankin C. J. apply with equal force to the facts of this case.

[15] In my opinion, the Chief Court of Sind is not a district Court within the meaning of S. 2 (4), Civil P. C.

[16] Mr. Lulla for the Province of Sind has further contended that assuming for the sake of argument this Court is a district Court within the meaning of S. 2 (4), Civil P. C., the application filed in this case is not an application in respect of which this Court is exercising original civil jurisdiction. There is considerable force in Mr. Lulla's argument, but it is not necessary for the purpose of this application to give a decision on this question.

[17] Accordingly I hold that the application does not lie to this Court. It is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Keshowdas Dalpatrai—for Appellants.

Manghanmal Bhojraj — for Respondents.

Thadani J. — This is an appeal from the decision of the learned First Class Subordinate Judge of Larkana in Suit No. 33 of 1938 in which he dismissed the plaintiffs-appellants' suit with costs.

[2] On 3rd March 1938, one Mir Dad Muhammad Khan Burdi Lohar, ancestor of respondents 1 to 7 and one Mir Bakhsho Khan son of Mir Allankhan, respondent 8, executed a registered lease deed in favour of one Seth Janjimal and Sadorosing, ancestors of the appellants. The period of the lease was seven years from 1928-29 to 1934-35. Under the terms of the lease, the lessees had to get excavation work done and to make advances to cultivators and for takavi, and the sums so advanced were recoverable from the lessors, and in the event of the lessors interfering in any way with the land or its produce, they were to become liable to the lessees for all damages accruing to them and the damages were made a charge upon the leased land.

[3] It is the appellants' case that their ancestors, the lessees carried out all the terms of the lease; they spent a sum of Rs. 7954 on excavation work, and advanced a sum of Rs. 14,560-2-3 to cultivators, and a further sum of Rs. 10,293-15-3 to their lessors, Mir Dad Md. Khan and Mir Bakhsho Khan, and cultivated the Kharif crop of the year 1928-29; in January 1929, however, when the crop was ready to be gathered, the lessors interfered with the leased land and forcibly took away most of the produce, and kept the possession of the leased land with themselves and the lessees were not permitted to enter upon the land.

[4] In April 1929 Mir Dad Md. Khan sought protection of the Manager, Sind Incumbered Estates, who took over possession of the leased land and retained possession of it till 13th November 1931, when he relinquished it under the provisions of S. 19, Sind Incumbered Estates Act and handed the possession of the land to the lessors.

[5] Seven years later, the appellants filed the present suit in December 1938 for accounts. In para. 15 of the plaint they stated that the cause of action arose on 15th November 1938 when a demand for accounts was made upon the respondents, on the termination of the lease in August 1935, and contended that the period of limitation was six years, having regard to the fact that the lease-deed and the mortgage deed were registered. In any case, they contended that as the protection of Mir Dad Md. Khan's estate lasted from 20th June 1929 to 13th November 1931, the period so taken up was to be excluded for the purposes of limitation as provided by the Sind Incumbered Estates Act.

[6] Respondent 2, Mir Allahrakhia Khan, in a very long written statement denied the appellants' claim and raised a number of technical defences. He denied the execution of the lease by his father Mir Dad Md. Khan and contended that even if the lease was signed by Mir Dad Md. Khan, it was without consideration. In any case, he alleged that the appellants' ancestors were guilty of the breach of the terms of the lease. He denied that the lessors had committed breach of the terms of the lease or had interfered in any way with the crop or had instigated the cultivators and obstructed the lessees. According to respondent 2, some disputes had arisen between the lessors and the lessees ; the lessees had committed frauds upon the lessors, and when Mir Dad Md. Khan applied for protection of the Manager, Sind Incumbered Estates, the land in suit was taken over by the Manager who, in due course, leased it to other persons.

[7] Upon the pleadings, Mr. Muhammad Bakhsh Memon, who was then the First Class Subordinate Judge of Larkana, framed the following issues :

1. Has this Court no jurisdiction to try this suit ?
2. Is the suit time-barred ?
3. Is the plaint not properly stamped ?
4. Can the suit not lie on the basis of the alleged lease deed ?
5. Have the plaintiffs no right to sue ?
6. Is there misjoinder of parties and causes of action ? If so, what order should be made ?
7. Is the suit not in the proper form ?
8. Was any lease deed executed by Mir Dad Md. Khan as alleged in para. 2 of the plaint ? If so, what are its terms ?
9. What is the consideration of the said lease ?
10. Did the parties act according to the terms of the said lease ?
11. Have the plaintiffs spent Rs. 7954 or anything as alleged by them in para. 4 of the plaint ?
12. Did the plaintiffs advance Rs. 10,294-15-3 or any amount to Mir Dad Muhammad ?
13. Did the plaintiffs cultivate the Kharif crop of the year 1928-29 ?
14. Did the late Mir Dad Muhammad take away the Kharif crop as alleged by the plaintiffs ?
15. Was any mortgage lease executed by Mir Dad Muhammad ? If so, what was its consideration ?
16. Is the mortgage bond separate from the lease in question ? If not, what is the consequence ?
17. Are the plaintiffs entitled to any damages and accounts ? If so, what ?
18. What should the decree be ?

[8] At the trial before Mr. Zaffarali A. Shaikh, in consequence of certain statements made by the advocates of the parties, the issues were recast and the parties went to trial on the following six issues only :

"1. Is the suit time-barred ?
2. Whether the suit is not in proper form ?
3. Whether compromise effected by the parties before the Manager with regard to the first crop is barred by limitation ?
4. Was the lease relinquished by Janjimal and Sadorosing as alleged in the written statement ? If so, what is the consequence ? Whether oral evidence can be led about this plea ?
5. To what damages, if any, are the plaintiffs entitled ?
6. What should the decree be ?"

[9] It appears that the advocates of the parties made a statement before the trial Judge that the question of the breach of terms of the lease did not arise, and Mr. Vishinsing for the plaintiffs stated that the compromise recorded by the Manager would appear to be binding on the parties; on issues 2 and 3 the findings of the trial Judge are against the appellants.

[10] Before us the appeal has been argued from different aspects of the two issues, but Mr. Keshowdas has failed to convince us that the decision of the trial Judge is wrong. Undoubtedly, the plaint in the suit has been very ingeniously framed, but we think the very ingenuity of it has failed in its purpose, as it is obvious that in the matter of advances made by the appellants to the cultivators and for takavi and money spent in excavation work, no question of accounting can ever arise between the appellants and the respondents. It is only in connexion with the alleged removal of the produce of the first year by the respondents that any question of accounting could possibly arise. Even as regards the value of the crop alleged to have been removed by the lessors, we think a suit for a specified amount should have been filed and not a suit for accounts. Indeed, the value of the crop was, as far back as 14th December 1929, estimated by the lessees at Rs. 26,000 odd when they lodged their claim before the Manager, Sind Incumbered Estates.

[11] In their claim, which was registered as claim No. 208 of 1930, by the Manager, Sind Incumbered Estates, it was stated by the lessees that Mir Dad Md. Khan had an account with them, and upon that account a sum of Rupees 10,293-15-3 was due from Mir Dad Md. Khan upto 18th February 1929. In this account the lessees included a sum of Rs. 90 on account of excavation expenses and a further sum of Rupees 743-15-0 as balance due on the mortgage for Rs. 6000, and interest at the rate of Rs. 2 per mensem.

[12] Two other claims were also made on the same day, 14th December 1929. One of them was registered as Claim No. 207 of 1930 for a sum of Rs. 12,864-9-0 made up of the following items : (1) arising out of the mortgage Rs. 7285, (2) arising out of advances made to cultivators, Rupees 5579-9-0. The other claim was registered as claim No. 202 of 1930, in respect of the produce of the leased land valued at Rs. 26,973-8-0. In this claim the lessees stated :

"In this manner the plaintiffs' claim on account of produce of both kharif and rabi crops of year 1928-29 amounts to Rs. 26,973-8-0. The claim as regards the remaining period of lease is given up."

From the three claims to which we have referred, it is plain that the legal representatives of the lessees in the present suit were in a position to claim, and were, therefore, bound to claim a sum of Rs. 26,973-8-0 multiplied seven times, for it is reasonable to suppose that the value of the crop of each succeeding year was approximately the same as that of the crop of 1929. In any case, court-fee should have been paid by the appellants on at least Rs. 26,973-8-0, the ascertained value of the crop of 1928-29. We shall presently indicate how the appellants' claim for the years 1930-35 based upon the alleged rights arising out of the lease or mortgage is clearly misconceived.

[13] The learned trial Judge has rested his decision upon what he calls a compromise filed before the Manager, according to which the lessees claimed a sum of Rs. 15,000 as principal and Rs. 1000 as interest in satisfaction of all the three claims made by them. It is not disputed that prior to the compromise the relationship between the parties was that of a lessor and lessee and mortgagor and mortgagee. As regards the relationship of lessor and lessee, no question of accounting can arise. The question of accounting might arise between a mortgagor and mortgagee in certain cases but in this case, the lessees-cum-mortgagees had lodged a claim for an ascertained sum as far back as 1929. We think the learned Judge was then right in holding that the suit as framed did not lie.

[14] Mr. Keshowdas for the appellants contends that as the alleged compromise was made at a time when the Manager, Sind Incumbered Estates had assumed protection, the debtor Mir Dad Md. Khan was not competent to enter into a contract involving him in pecuniary liability, and that the alleged compromise was a contract involving him in a pecuniary liability. On the facts of this case, we are unable to take the view that the alleged compromise was the result of an agreement as defined in S. 2, Contract Act.

[15] It is true the learned Judge has stated at p. 131 of the paper book, Ex. 137, that the parties have compromised for a sum of Rs. 15,000 as principal and Rs. 1000 as interest, but we think the correct interpretation of the statement is that the lessees instead of adhering to their original claims Nos. 202, 207 and 208, remitted them in part and limited them to Rs. 16,000 only within the meaning of S. 63, Contract Act.

[16] A "promise" is defined in cl. (b) of S. 2, Contract Act, thus :

"When the person to whom the proposal is made signifies his assent thereto, the proposal is said to be accepted. A proposal, when accepted, becomes a promise.'

"Promise" as defined in cl. (b) of S. 2 is something quite different to an agreement as defined in cl. (e) of S. 2, Contract Act. The statement of the lessees reducing their claim to Rs. 16,000 was made, we think, in pursuance of a proposal made by the lessors to the lessees to reduce their claims and the lessees accepting the proposal reduced their claim to Rs 16,000. Such an acceptance is not an agreement within the meaning of cl. (e) of S. 2, Contract Act. Every agreement must involve consideration, and if it is the case of the estate-owner that the alleged compromise was an agreement within the meaning of S. 2, Contract Act, he must allege and prove consideration. None has been alleged by the estate-owner. We think the alleged compromise falls properly within the terms of S. 63, Contract Act, which does not require any agreement.

[17] Apparently Mr. Keshowdas based his contention upon a decision of the Bombay High Court in 28 Bom. 66,[1] in which it is stated that a dispensation or remission under S. 63, Contract Act, involves a promise as defined by S. 2 (b), or what is the same thing, an agreement within S. 2 (e) of the Act. But this view of the Bombay High Court has not been approved of by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 55 I. A. 151[2] at p. 160, where their Lordships observed :

"The language of the section (S. 63, Contract Act) does not refer to any such agreement and ought not to be enlarged by any implication of English doctrines."

Sir Maurice Gwyer, retired Chief Justice of India and Editor of the Commentary on Indian Contract Act by Pollock & Mulla, Edn. 7 (1944) at p. 338 has stated :

"Thus the words of the section are construed according to their natural meaning, and a promisee can discharge the promise not only without consideration but without a new agreement. The learned authors repeated part of their original protest in the previous edition of this work, though they themselves admitted that it was no longer necessary. There is nothing in the words of the section (they said) about promise, proposal, or acceptance, and it was difficult to see why any such matter should be imported, except on the assumption that the intention was to alter the English law of accord and satisfaction. But if consideration is no longer required, why should agreement be required ? It is hoped that Indian Courts have at last shaken off the unfortunate and erroneous presumption that a codifying Act is to be read as saving every existing rule, however peculiar, which it does not repeal in literal terms."

[18] In (1947) 1 M. L. J. 226,[3] the facts were these : An agreement between the parties to two promissory notes provided :

"The balance due is Rs. 5309-2-11, out of which the amount excused out of grace is Rs. 3809 2-11, the balance of Rs. 1500 shall be paid by 30th June 1942, and the two bonds executed and delivered on 15th May 1941, shall be taken back after getting the endorsement of payment made thereon."

It was held,

"the language clearly indicates that to the extent to which there was a remission out of grace, it was a remission in præsenti and under S. 63, Contract Act, there could be remission in part as well. The failure to follow up the remission by payment of the balance does not invalidate the remission and make the whole amount payable. The remission was valid even though it was not supported by consideration by reason of S. 63, Contract Act."

[19] Mr. Keshowdas, however, contends that as the estate of Mir Dad Md. Khan was relinquished under S. 19, Sind Incumbered Estates Act, the debts and liabilities which were barred by S. 14 of the Act were revived in their original character. We have heard long arguments upon the interpretation of S. 19 (d) with reference to S. 14, Sind Incumbered Estates Act. It was first contended by Mr. Keshowdas that where claims are lodged in pursuance of S. 12, they are revived but where no claims are lodged, they are discharged for all purposes and on all occasions as provided by S. 14. Later, Mr. Keshowdas contended that where the estate is relinquished under S. 19 of the Act, all claims, whether made or not, are revived in their original character.

[20] For the purposes of this appeal, we will assume that upon relinquishment of an estate under S. 19, all claims are revived, but we are not prepared to assume that they are always revived in their original character. Their revival is subject to the provisions of S. 63, Contract Act. In the case before us, not only did the lessees reduce their claim to Rs. 16,000, but they gave up all their claims arising out of the lease in respect of the years 1930-35. We cannot see, then, how a suit for accounts by the legal representatives of the lessees was competent.

[21] When Mr. Keshowdas was faced with the difficulty arising out of the statement made by his clients reducing their claim to Rs. 16,000 which would bar a suit after the expiry of three years from the date of the cause of action, he contended that assuming the provisions of S. 63, Contract Act, applied, the lessees had not abandoned their charge upon the property created in terms of the lease and the charge would entitle them to file a suit within twelve years of the date of cause of action under Art. 132, Limitation Act.

[22] Mr. Keshowdas' argument is that as the lease provides that in case the lessors entered upon the land or interfered with the batai or caused obstruction in any way and the lessees were deprived of their benefit under the lease, the lessors had made themselves liable to pay all damages and costs, and the claim in damages was to be a charge upon the leased property. The lessees are, therefore, in his submission entitled to invoke the aid of Art. 132, Limitation Act.

[23] We invited Mr. Keshowdas to refer us to facts which sought to prove that the lessors had entered upon the land or interfered with the lessees in any way. Mr. Keshowdas invited our attention to para. 5 of the plaint in which it is stated that the lessors forcibly took away most of the produce in January 1929. But when we examined this allegation, our attention was drawn to Ex. 87, a suit (No. 11 of 1929), filed by the lessees against the lessors for a declaration on 28th February 1929. In para. 6 of the plaint in Suit No. 11 of 1929, the lessees alleged that the defendants were threatening and attempting to interfere with the possession of the land and with its produce and were denying the plaintiffs' rights and were persuading the cultivators to obstruct the plaintiffs in taking away the produce. These averments made on 28th February 1929 clearly falsify the averments made in para. 5 of the plaint in the present suit that in January 1929 the lessors had forcibly removed the produce.

[24] There was yet another suit—suit No. 127 of 1928 — instituted in the First Class Subordinate Civil Court of Shikarpur by one Tarachand for possession and mesne profits against Mir Dad Md. Khan and the lessees, in which an application was made for the appointment of a Receiver. The lessee Janjimal filed an affidavit on 7th January 1929 in which he stated that he was in sole possession of the land in suit. Mir Dad Md. Khan also filed an answer on 21st February 1929 in which he stated that the land had been cultivated by Janjimal. It is clear from the statement of Mir Dad Md. Khan that the land in suit was in the possession of the lessees at least upto the end of February 1929. Indeed, we think, by this time the lessors had decided to seek protection of the Manager, Sind Incumbered Estates, and the Manager was preparing to assume protection. It is significant that at no time did the lessees allege forcible possession by the lessors before the Manager. We are not prepared to accept the allegation of forcible possession by the lessors made by the legal representatives of the lessees for the first time in 1938 in the present suit. We think the lessees have failed to prove facts which would enable them to claim a charge upon the leased land.

[25] It is to be observed that the lessees, far from relying upon Art. 132, Limitation Act, had in para. 15 of their plaint relied upon Art. 120 only of the Limitation Act. We think the plaintiffs had misconceived the date upon which cause of action accrued to them. As we have observed, Claim No. 202 of 1930 was made on 14th December 1929. At p. 123 of the paper-book, the lessees have stated as follows :

"In this manner the plaintiffs' claim on account of produce of both kharif and rabi crops of year 1928-29 amounts to Rs. 26,973-8-0. The claim as regards the remaining period of lease is given up."

The date on which cause of action accrued to the lessees was 14th December 1929. Six years from 14th December 1929 would bring the lessees to 14th December 1935; add to this the period of two years five months and seven days, during which the estate was under protection, the suit should have been filed in the last week of May 1937. The present suit was, however, filed in 1938 when it was time-barred.

[26] It appears that the learned trial Judge took the view that the lease had been surrendered by the lessees, and Mr. Keshowdas contends that the surrender of a registered lease can only take place by a registered instrument. It is not necessary to deal with this point as we think the lessees had on 14th December 1929 remitted performance of the promise or promises made under the lease, and under S. 63, Contract Act, they cannot now enforce the rights under the lease and the question of the surrender of the lease by a registered instrument does not arise. In this view it is unnecessary to consider the cases in 59 Bom. 180,[4] 20 Mad. 367,[5] 8 I. C. 47 (Cal.)[6] and A. I. R. 1941 Cal. 257.[7]

[27] Our conclusion, then, is that a suit for accounts was misconceived, that a suit should have been filed for Rs. 16,000 within the period of limitation. Accordingly we affirm the decision of the trial Judge on all the issues upon which the parties went to trial, and particularly upon the two issues argued before us. In the result we dismiss the appeal with costs.

Second Appeal No. 60 of 1942, Decided on 21-2-1947, against judgment and decree of District Judge, Sukkur.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 21, R. 103 — Parties to suit — Person other than one obstructing delivery of possession, if can be joined as defendant — Multifariousness—Civil P. C. (1908), O. 1, R. 9.

Where a plaintiff brings a suit under O. 21, R. 103 to establish his claim for present possession of the property, the mere fact that that suit is occasioned by obstruction and that he is compelled by the particular facts of the case to bring a suit within a period of one year does not prevent his joining other parties as defendants, if such parties could have been joined in any suit for present possession brought by him apart from the provisions of O. 21, R. 103 : 22 A. I. R. 1935 Sind 129, Rel. on. [Para 6]

The decree-holder auction-purchaser brought a suit under O. 21, R. 103 against the mother of the judgment-debtor who obstructed the delivery of possession and also joined her sons in occupation of the property as defendants. The mother died pending the suit :

Held that the suit was not bad on the ground of multifariousness. [Para 6]

Held also that even if the suit had been bad on the ground of multifariousness, it merely meant that the plaintiff would have been asked to choose either one or other of the defendants as the party against whom he wished to proceed. As the mother was dead, there would be no choice of alternatives and he would have to bring a suit against her sons who were joined as defendants when at the beginning of the suit she was still living. Case referred :—

Fatehchand Assudamal — for Appellants.

Kimatrai Bhojraj — for Respondent.

Davis C. J. — This is an appeal against a judgment of the learned District Judge of Sukkur, in which he dismissed an appeal argued before him, chiefly on the ground that it was not proper for the plaintiff to join as defendants not only one Tulsibai, the wife of Seth Radhakishendas but defendants 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6, who were her sons.

[2] The suit arose out of the fact that the plaintiff entered into business with defendant 2 and defendant 2 mortgaged his property to the plaintiff for payment of his business debts. A suit was filed; a mortgage decree was passed and in execution of the mortgage decree the property was sold and purchased by the plaintiff himself, but when the plaintiff tried to take possession, he was obstructed by Tulsibai, the mother of defendant 2 and he then filed an application under O. 21, R. 97, Civil P. C., for the removal of the obstruction; that application was, however, dismissed. The plaintiff was then obliged to bring a suit as required by O. 21, R. 103, Civil P. C., alleging that Tulsibai had no right to the property, and alleging also that her sons, defendants 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6 had no right to occupy the property in prejudice to his rights. It does appear that the only point merely pressed before the Subordinate Court was that the plaint was insufficiently stamped. The learned District Judge in appeal differed from the learned Subordinate Judge, who held that the plaint was sufficiently stamped, the learned District Judge holding that the plaint was not sufficiently stamped and directing the plaintiff to pay an ad valorem court-fee before he could recover possession. The question of valuation was not pressed before us; but what was pressed was the point that the suit was bad on the ground of multifariousness and it may be said that this point was covered by part 2 of issue 1: "Is the plaint insufficiently stamped and cannot the suit lie in the form in which it is brought?"

[3] Now, on this point it was argued on behalf of the appellant before us that a suit brought under O. 21, R. 103, Civil P. C., is a suit brought to remove an obstruction and can be brought only against a person responsible for the obstruction, in this case Tulsibai.

[4] But when one reads through O. 21, R. 103, Civil P. C., one does not find that it is a suit brought in terms of removal of obstruction at all; it is as follows:

"Any party not being a judgment-debtor against whom an order is made under R. 98, R. 99 or R. 101 may institute a suit to establish the right which he claims to the present possession of the property; but, subject to the result of such suit (if any), the order shall be conclusive."

and we read this rule as really meaning that the aggrieved party is referred to a civil suit in order to establish his right to the present possession of property, whether it be based upon title or otherwise. We cannot see anything in that order which prevents him, when he brings a suit for title, as under the terms of the order he must do, from bringing the suit not only against the one person who obstructs him in his claim to possession of the house but against any other persons in occupation of the house, and who would obstruct his claim to possession likewise.

[5] There is a ruling of the Sind Judicial Commissioner's Court reported in A. I. R. 1935 Sind 129,[1] in which it was laid down that:

"O. 21, R. 103, Civil P. C., does not purport to lay down what may or may not be included in a suit filed for the purpose indicated therein, or what persons may be impleaded as parties to such a suit. The object of this rule is not far to seek. On the one hand the rule is intended to deprive the claimant of his remedy by way of an appeal or application for revision to a higher Court, and on the other to declare that the adverse order shall be conclusive against the claimant, subject however, to the result of any suit which he may file to establish his claim to the 'present possession of the property' which is the subject-matter of the order passed against him."

[6] It would appear to us that when the plaintiff brings a suit to establish his claim for present possession of the property, the mere fact that that suit is occasioned by obstruction and that he is compelled by the particular facts of the case to bring a suit within a period of one year does not prevent his joining other parties as defendants, if such parties could have been joined in any suit for present possession brought by him apart from the provisions of O. 21, R. 103, Civil P. C. In this particular case if we exclude from our consideration the fact that the suit is, as it were provoked by an obstruction brought against a decree-holder and if we regard the suit as a suit brought by the plaintiff claiming possession of the property in suit then it would appear that the suit would not be bad on the ground of multifariousness, and we see no reason to hold that it is bad merely because of the occasion which leads the plaintiff to seek the assistance of the Court.

[7] We might also add that as Tulsibai is now dead, if the suit had been bad on the ground of multifariousness, it merely means that the plaintiff would have been asked to choose either one or other of the defendants as the party against whom he wished to proceed. As Tulsibai is now dead there would be no choice of alternatives and he would have to bring a suit against the sons of Tulsibai, who were joined as defendants, when at the beginning of the suit she was still living.

[8] The learned advocate for the appellant wished to argue the question of set off, the right of defendant 2 to charge against the plaintiff certain business expenses due from the plaintiff to himself. There is no issue raised on this question at all. It seems to have been merely a point brought forward in some vague way in argument. We see no reason to allow it to be made the subject of argument in appeal.

[9] We therefore confirm the judgment of the power appellate Court and dismiss the appeal with costs.

At the interview the District Magistrate asked the accused whether he was a pleader and on his replying in the negative told him not to assume the role of a pleader. The District Magistrate then sent for the complainant who was standing outside. At this stage the accused got up, flung the complaint at the District Magistrate and went away uttering the words 'phool, phool'. The accused was prosecuted for an offence under S. 228:

Held that the insult was given at a private interview which did not become a stage of judicial proceedings by reason of the expression of mere intention to examine the complainant by the District Magistrate. The accused had therefore committed no offence under S. 228.

[2] On 17th August 1946, shortly before noon, the appellant, a member of the Sind Legislative Assembly, one R B. Hotchand, a zamindar of Nawabshah, and Mr. Tilokchand, Editor "Hind Samachar", Nawabshah, sought an interview with Mr. Masud, District Magistrate of Nawabshah. Mr. Masud was then sitting in the verandah of his office. The appellant and his two companions announced themselves and Mr. Masud promptly sent for them. The appellant's interview was connected with an alleged enticement of Mt. Gangi wife of one Mengho, by two Pathans Gulmahomed and Laloo. The appellant told Mr. Masud the object of his visit, and when he had nearly finished narrating the facts, Mr. Masud asked him whether he was a pleader representing Mengho in a criminal case. The appellant said: "No, but I am a representative of the people, and I have come to plead for a man of my constituency," whereupon Mr. Masud told him: "As a representative of the people you can bring to my notice complaints of a general character affecting the general public, but you cannot assume the roll of a pleader in criminal cases such as this." Mr. Masud then asked the appellant where the complainant was, and expressed his desire to examine him. The appellant informed Mr. Masud that Mengho was standing outside. Mr. Masud rang the bell and asked his Naik Haji Wario to call Mengho. When Mengho came, Mr. Masud asked him if he was the complainant. The appellant then is said to have got up from his chair, to use the words of the learned Sessions Judge, "with a thump on the ground", and flinging the application at Mr. Masud with a jerk of his arm, said "If you do not recognize me as a representative of the people, I do not want to speak to you." Saying so, he walked out, and his two companions R. B. Hotchand and Tilokchand followed him. As the appellant walked out, Mr. Masud told him: "Do not come to me again." The appellant then paused, looked back and muttered something which appeared to Mr. Masud to indicate that he was going to say something more offensive. Mr. Masud asked him to go away. The appellant then went out muttering something which Mr. Masud did not understand, but Mr. Masud's Naik Haji Vario told him that the appellant had muttered "phool, phool" (fool, fool).

(3) After the appellant and his companions had gone away, it is the prosecution case that Mr. Masud examined Mengho orally and gave him a date of hearing, and directed a notice to issue to the Pathans Laloo and his brother Gul Muhammad to produce the woman.

[4] The 17th August 1946 was a Saturday. The following day, the 18th August, the appellant received a notice from Mr. Masud to appear before him which he did on the evening of the same day. According to Mr. Masud he took down his statement, and on the same day he filed a complaint against the appellant in the Court of the Resident Magistrate at Nawabshah under S. 228, Penal Code. The appellant then applied to this Court for a transfer of the complaint to any other district than Nawabshah, and this Court ordered the case to be committed to the Court of Session at Nawabshah.

[5] We propose to dispose of this appeal on two points of law, which arise out of the proceedings taken by the learned District Magistrate, Nawabshah, and which we think are fatal to the success of the prosecution.

[6] It appears that when the appellant appeared before the learned District Magistrate on 18-8-1946 the latter recorded the appellant's statement made in answer to a question put by him in these terms:

"Q. — You, on 17th August 1946, committed an offence under s. 228, I. P. C. by intentionally offering an insult and causing interruption to this Court while it was holding its judicial function. The statement of facts is read out to you. What have you to say in your defence ?"

"A. — I have heard the statement of facts, but I say they are not correct, and I have not committed any offence. This is all that I have to say at present."

Mr. Masud then passed the following order on the same day:

"Cognizance of the offence was taken. The accused has committed an offence under S. 228, I. P. C. He offers no apology. His statement has been taken.

The accused is directed to stand his trial before the Resident Magistrate, Nawabshah. He is ordered to enter into personal recognizance bond in the amount of Rs. 1,000/- to appear before the Resident Magistrate Nawabshah, on the 24th of August."

From this order it is clear that the learned District Magistrate purported to take action pursuant to S. 482, Criminal P. C, read with S. 480, Criminal P. C, which says: [After quoting Ss. 480 and 482 the judgment proceeded:]

[7] The learned Advocate-General contends that an action taken under S. 482, Criminal P. C. is independent of S. 480, Criminal P. C., and in support of his contention he has relied upon A.I.R. 1936 ALL. 762,[1] and 35 Cal. 161.[2] We shall presently deal with these cases. For the present we would content ourselves with analysing Ss. 480 to 482 Criminal P. C.

[8] Section 482, Criminal P. C., is employed by a Court only when offences mentioned in S. 480 are committed in its view or presence and it is of the opinion that imprisonment as a substantive punishment should be awarded or a fine exceeding Rs. 200 should be imposed upon the accused person, or when for any other reason the Court is of the opinion that the case should not be disposed of under S. 480. The words "disposed of" in S. 480 are very significant. We think they presuppose that cognizance has been taken under S. 480, Criminal P. C. of one of the offences therein specified.

[9] The question, therefore, arises whether a Court can act under S. 482, Cri. P. C., when cognizance has not been taken of the offence described in S. 480 before it has risen for the day. We think the answer to this question must be in the negative. Section 482, Criminal P. C. refers among other things to the "recording of the facts constituting the offence and the statement of the case as hereinbefore provided", and S. 481, Criminal P. C., says :—

" In every such case the Court shall record the facts constituting the offence, with the statement (if any) made by the offender. . . . . "

It is significant that S. 482, Criminal P. C., does not embody the provisions of S. 481 in their entirety. It leaves out the words "as well as the finding and sentence" of sub-section (1) of S. 481, Criminal P. C., and the whole of sub-s. (2). The reason for the omission of the words "as well as the finding and the sentence", is, we think, to be found in the difference in the use of the two sections. Whereas under S. 480 the Court has to record the finding and sentence, under S. 482, the Court, after it has taken cognizance under S. 480, does not try the case itself, but forwards it to a Magistrate having jurisdiction to try it. This aspect of the case has been considered in 41 Cr. L. J. 766[3] where Blacker J. observed:—

"Now the words 'the Court is. . . . of opinion that the case should not be disposed of under S. 480', show clearly that the decision to act under this section (S. 482) must be taken at a time when action under S. 480 is still possible, i. e., on the same day before the rising of the Court....An examination of the language of S. 482 shows to me quite unmistakably that the procedure therein described is only to be adopted in a case where the Court has already taken cognizance under S. 480, Criminal P.C. . . . .Again the reasons for which a Court may act under S. 482 will in many, if not in most cases be such as it cannot find to exist unless it has already held some inquiry into the matter. An apparently serious contempt may be greatly mitigated by the humble and repentant attitude of the offender when called upon to explain. Conversely a less serious complaint may be aggravated by a defiant and insolent attitude. Lastly, in the thrid ground for which the Court may decide to adopt this procedure, the words used are not 'dealt with' or any similar phrase, but 'disposed of'. These words suggest that, just as in the two preceding grounds, it is the final result of the case which is being envisaged, and that therefore what the Court is considering is not whether it shall start to take cognizance itself, but whether having taken cognizance, it shall leave the final action to some other Court. But itself, this circumstance might not be of any essential importance, but it does tend to show that the Legislature was choosing its language carefully and that, therefore, the use of the word 'accused' above was deliberate."

It is true, Bennet J. in A. I. R. 1936 ALL. 762,[1] has taken a view of S. 482, Criminal P. C., which cannot be reconciled with the view of Blacker J. With respect, if Bennet J. intended to say that S. 482 could be employed without taking cognizance of the offence referred to in S. 480, Criminal P. C., before the Court rises for the day, we cannot agree. The view of Bennet J., if accepted, would render S. 476, Criminal P. C., in relation to an offence under S. 228, I. P. C., entirely superfluous. We do not think the Legislature could have intended to provide two alternative remedies in respect of an offence committed under S. 228, I. P. C. in addition to the one under S. 480, Criminal P. C.

[10] We are unable to accept the submission of the learned Advocate-General that where cognizance of an offence mentioned in S. 480, Criminal P. C., is not taken by a Court before it rises for the day, it is still open to it to act either under S. 482, Criminal P. C. or S. 476, Criminal P. C., for the obvious reason that when proceedings are taken under S. 476, Criminal P. C., a Court makes a complaint to another Court having jurisdiction, and the Court to which the complaint is made then proceeds to deal with it, not dispose of it, under Chapter XVI of the Code of Criminal Procedure. But when a case is forwarded to a Magistrate under the provisions of S. 482, Criminal P. C., there is no question of the application of Chapter XVI, Criminal P. C., because the case is sent to a Court for trial, and the procedure to be followed in such a case is the procedure contained in Chapters XX or XXI, Criminal P. C.

[11] We wish to make it plain that we do not accept the view that a Court in whose view an offence mentioned in S. 480, Criminal P. C. is committed, is bound to forward the case to a Magistrate on the same day on which the offence was committed, under the provisions of S. 482, Criminal P. C. All that we wish to say is that the cognizance of the offence must have been taken on the same day before the Court rises if resort is had to S. 482, Criminal P. C. If cognizance has not been taken in accordance with S. 480, Criminal P. C., and if the Court still wishes to take proceedings, it can do so under the provisions of S. 476, Criminal P. C., but not under S. 482, Criminal P. C.

[12] We think the case in 35 Cal 161,[2] does not assist the Crown in any way. From the facts stated in the judgment of Rampini, J. it appears that a witness who was subsequently an accused person, had declined to take an oath or to answer questions put to him on a certain date, and the Court on the same day required him to execute a bond for personal recognizance to appear again. By this action the Court undoubtedly took cognizance of the offence on the same day.

[13] The facts of the case before us, do not justify the conclusion that the learned District Magistrate of Nawabshah took cognizance of the alleged offence on 17th August 1946. The order of the learned District Magistrate dated 18th August, forwarding the case to the Resident Magistrate, Nawabshah, for trial, contains the words "cognizance of the offence was taken." The order does not say that cognizance was taken on the 17th. The learned District Magistrate while giving evidence at the trial said he could not remember the time when he wrote Ex. 15. Exhibit 15 is an order dated 17-8-1946, summoning the appellant to appear on the next day. But we are not satisfied that the learned District Magistrate passed the order contained in Ex. 15 before he rose for the day. The learned District Magistrate nowhere says in Ex. 15 that he took cognizance of the offence.

[14] The failure of the learned District Magistrate to take cognizance of the alleged offence on 17th August, is, we think, fatal to his subsequent action under the provisions of S. 482, Criminal P. C. Indeed, the Advocate-General realised the significance of this failure and contended that the action taken by the learned District Magistrate was one under the provisions of S. 476, Criminal P. C. But when it was pointed out to the learned Advocate-General that in Ex. 22, dated 18th August 1946, the District Magistrate says that "cognizance of the offence was taken", he abandoned the contention and justified the action of the District Magistrate under the provisions of S. 482, Criminal P. C. We have already stated that we are unable to accept the interpretation of the learned Advocate-General of S. 482, Criminal P. C.

[15] The taking of cognizance in accordance with the provisions of S. 480, Criminal P. C., is we think, a condition precedent to the employment of S. 482, Criminal P. C., and as the condition precedent has not been satisfied in this case; the forwarding of the case by the learned District Magistrate to the Resident Magistrate, Nawabshah. for trial was, in our opinion, contrary to law, and a trial had upon a case so forwarded was without jurisdiction, notwithstanding the fact that this Court committed the case for trial to the Court of Session.

[16] There is yet another aspect of the case upon which, we think, the appeal must be allowed. We are not satisfied that the alleged offence under S. 228, I. P. C., was committed in any stage of a judicial proceeding. Section 228, I. P. C., reads:

"Whoever intentionally offers any insult or causes any interruption to any public servant, while such public servant is sitting in any stage of a judicial proceeding, shall be punished with simple imprisonment."

(After discussing the evidence of District Magistrate the judgment proceeds:)

[17] The learned Advocate-General concedes that the interview given by Mr. Masud to the appellant was a private interview, but he contends that the private interview became a stage of judicial proceeding when Mr. Masud decided to call Mengho in order to take his statement. We are unable to regard, what was undoubtedly a private interview, as a stage in a judicial proceeding merely because in consequence of the private interview Mr. Masud expressed his intention to examine the person on whose behalf the interview was sought. The utmost that can be said is that Mr. Masud intended or prepared himself to examine the person on whose behalf the interview was sought. His intention or preparation to examine Mengho had not yet ripened into any stage of judicial proceeding. It is common ground that the alleged insult was offered by the appellant before Mengho was examined.

[18] The learned District Magistrate's evidence on the question of Mengho's examination is somewhat obscure. It is conceded by the learned Advocate-General that there is no recorded statement of Mengho. The learned District Magistrate says in his evidence that he questioned Mengho orally. We were unable to see the object or the necessity of examining Mengho at all when it was clear from the petition that Mengho did not desire to have any judicial proceedings taken against the two pathans. The learned Advocate-General has however enlightened us on this point by saying that the learned District Magistrate wished to examine Mengho in order to pass an order under the provisions of S. 552, Criminal P. C. But S. 552, Criminal P. C., says:

"Upon complaint made to a Presidency Magistrate or District Magistrate on oath of the abduction or unlawful detention of a woman; or of a female child under the age of sixteen years for any unlawful purpose, he may make an order for the immediate restoration of such woman to her liberty, or of such female child to her husband, parent, guardian or other person having the lawful charge of such child, and may compel compliance of such order, using such force as may be necessary."

Mengho had not alleged any abduction. Moreover the learned District Magistrate had not passed any order for the immediate restoration of Mt. Gangi to Mengho, or taken any other action authorised by S. 552, Cr. P. C. Section 552 does not authorise a District Magistrate to issue notice to persons accused of unlawful detention to produce the detained woman. There is nothing in writing to show that Mengho was ever examined on oath by the District Magistrate on 17th August. Assuming Mengho was orally questioned by the District Magistrate, it is an admitted position that the appellant had left long before the District Magistrate orally examined him.

[19] On a careful examination of the case, we are not satisfied that the alleged insult was offered to the learned District Magistrate while he was sitting in any stage of a judicial proceeding.

[20] We therefore set aside the conviction and sentence and acquit the appellant. The fine, if paid, will be refunded to him.

(b) Government of India Act (1935), S. 212—Decision of Privy Council whether on appeal from Indian Courts or not is binding on Indian Courts. (Per Tyabji C. J.)

It cannot be said that S. 212, Government of India Act, makes a decision of the Privy Council binding on the Indian Courts only when the decision was made on an appeal from India. There is no such limitation in the section, and all tribunals from which appeals lie to the Privy Council must necessarily be bound as subordinate Courts by all decisions of the Privy Council, as the decisions of a Sperior Court. [Para 4]

(c) Precedents — Decision of House of Lords is not binding on Indian Courts. (Per Tyabji C. J.)

Strictly speaking, a decision of the House of Lords cannot be said to be binding on any Indian Court, though there can be no question about the House of Lords being the supreme tribunal to settle English Law and about all Courts, which are bound to follow the English Law, being bound by the decisions of the House of Lords. [Para 4] other parties (with of course the modifications necessitated by the fact of a corporation being a corporation). A corporation can obtain discovery and inspection from the other party, and can be compelled to make discovery and give inspection. Unlike the Crown, corporation can be sued in contracts and in tort, and can even be indicted and fined for criminal offences. It is of course true that apart from matters relating to the ordinary rules of procedure applicable to all parties to a suit, it is open to a corporation to show that it was suing or being sued as the representative or agent of the Crown, and to ask the Court to take into consideration and give effect to such prerogative rights as it could claim as an agent of the Crown. Advocate-General of Sind —for the Crown.

(d) Corporation — Corporation can sue and be sued like any subject — Corporation can obtain discovery and can be compelled to make discovery —Civil P. C. (1908), O. 11, R. 12.

Tyabji C. J. — We have before us two applications under O. 11, R. 12, Civil P. C., in each of which the plaintiff seeks an order for discovery on oath against the defendant, one in Suit No. 210 of 1946 against the Governor-General-in-Council, in respect of a claim against the North Western Railway, and the other in Suit No. 486 of 1946 against the Province of Sind, in respect of a claim against the Provincial Government. These applications were rejected by the Registrar (O. S.) on the ground that no such order as was prayed could be made against the Crown, and the decision of O'Sullivan J., in I. L. R. (1946) Kar. 416,[1] was relied upon. The plaintiffs being dissatisfied with the orders, had the matters brought before the Judge, Constantine J., and questioned the correctness of the decision of O'Sullivan J. Having regard to the very great importance of the matter, Constantine J., made a reference under R. 10 of the Rules of this Court, and the matter is now before us.

[2] In I. L. R. (1946) Kar. 416,[1] O'Sullivan J., had three applications against the Crown before him, two under O. 11, R. 12, Civil P. C., for discovery on oath, and the third under O. 11, R. 19 (2) for inspection, after discovery had been made. He considered that the same broad question was involved in all the three applications, viz., whether the Crown in India had the same prerogative as regards the procedure applicable to discovery and inspection as it had in England. O'Sullivan J., decided that it had. He rejected the contention that the statutory law in India had by necessary implication deprived the Crown of the prerogative claimed. He therefore held, first, that no order could be made compelling the Crown to make discovery and that it was not within the province of the Court to require the Crown to state any special ground of objection or to enquire into the reasons why the Crown objected. Secondly with regard to the third application before him, which raised a question of the procedure to be followed under O. 11, R. 19 (2) on the Crown objecting to produce certain documents for inspection, O'Sullivan J., considered that there was a conflict between the decision of the Privy Council in (1931) A. C. 704,[2] and the decision of the House of Lords in (1942) 1 ALL. E. R. 587[3] as to whether the privilege claimed included the right to refuse to produce the documents for the inspection of the Court. With regard to this, O'Sullivan J., said:

"With very great respect to these most eminent tribunals, it appears to me that the decision of the House of Lords is to be preferred on the question under consideration. The Privy Council has itself laid down in (1927) A. C. 515,[4] that a decision of the House of Lords is the highest authority binding on the Courts and Dominions, and may, therefore, be preferred on a question of common law to an earlier decision of the Judicial Committee itself. This case has been referred to in Bentwich's Privy Council Practice at p. 238.

The point, however, is as to whether S. 212, Government of India Act, binds me to follow the decision of the Privy Council in the Australian case; and to my opinion it does not. I am of the view that S. 212 must be construed as referring only to judgments of the Privy Council in Indian appeals. The Sovereign has retained the prerogative of being the supreme tribunal of justice in the Empire and the ultimate right of appeal from all parts of the Empire is therefore to the King in Council. The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council is an Imperial body representing the Empire and the right of appeal to it has been defined and regulated in the case of the Dominions, colonies, dependancies and possessions by various statutes, Letters Patent and Orders in Council. Laws are not uniform throughout the Empire and the Privy Council decides appeals in accordance with the laws in force at the places from which they come. It seems to follow that the decision of this supreme tribunal on an appeal from one part of the Empire regulates as such appeal would be by a particular statute, charter or order in Council, and decided in accordance with a particular set of laws, is not and cannot be binding on the Courts in another part of the Empire."

[3] It was contended before us that O'Sullivan J. was in error on both these matters, and that the Privy Council decision is applicable, and therefore binding upon the Courts in India on all the matters it deals with.

[4] We are, however, only concerned with the first matter dealt with by O'Sullivan J. as the two applications before us are both applications under O. 11, R. 12, and not with any questions that might arise on an application under O. 11 R. 19 (2). The broad question before us is whether in the matter of the procedure relating to discovery and inspection the law applicable to the Crown, when a party to a suit in India, is the same as that applicable to any other party, or whether the Crown in India still retains the prerogative, which it has in England, by virtue of which no order can be made against it compelling it to make discovery or give inspection. There is no question here about the applicability of the Privy Council decision referred to above as that was a decision in a case from Australia where admittedly the prerogative, here in question, did not exist and the state was bound like any subject to make discovery and give inspection. I am unable however to agree with the view of O'Sullivan J., cited above, that S. 212, Government of India Act, makes a decision of the Privy Council binding on the Indian Courts only when the decision was made on an appeal from India. There is no such limitation in the section, and all tribunals from which appeals lie to the Privy Council must, I think, necessarily be bound as subordinate Courts by all decisions of the Privy Council, as the decisions of a Superior Court. In 52 I. A. 398,[5] their Lordships stated:

"their Lordships think it desirable to point out that it is not open to the Courts in India to question any principle enunciated by this Board, although they have a right of examining the facts of any case before them to see whether and how far the principle on which stress is laid applies to the facts of the particular cases."

In 38 Mad. 941[6] Sadasiva Ayyar J. said:

"It seems to me that this decision of the Privy Council pronounced on the 31st March 1909 (about 3½ months after the pronouncement of the Full Bench decision in 32 Mad. 95,[7] on 15th December 1908) clearly overrules the decision in the latter case, unless we are to accede to the ingenious argument of Mr. Sheshagiri Ayyar that we are not bound by the decision of the Privy Council unless it was given in a case which went up on appeal from an Indian tribunal. (The appeal case of 1909 was an appeal from the decision of the Supreme Court of the Straits Settlements.) I am wholly unable to hold that the binding nature of a decision of the Privy Council depends on the locality of the tribunal which pronounced the decision from which the appeal was preferred to the Privy Council, any more than the binding nature of a decision of this Madras High Court upon a Madras District Court depends on the question whether the High Court's decision was pronounced in an appeal preferred in a case which arose in that particular district", and Tyabji J. also expressed the same view. In the Lahore Full Bench case, A. I. R. 1946 Lah. 116,[8] Harries C. J. held that in a case of conflict, a decision of the Privy Council was binding whereas a decision of the House of Lords was not (cf. p. 123). Strictly speaking, a decision of the House of Lords cannot be said to be "binding" on any Indian Court, though there can be no question about the House of Lords being "the supreme tribunal to settle English Law" and about all Courts, which are bound to follow the English Law, being bound by the decisions of the House of Lords, as was pointed out by the Privy Council in 1927 A. C. 515[4] at p. 519. The question, to what extent the Privy Council decision was applicable, is another matter.

[5] It is necessary first to turn for a moment to the law in England. As Viscount Simon, L. C. stated in (1942) 1 ALL. E. R. 587:[3]

"When the Crown (which for this purpose must be taken to include a Government department, or a minister of the Crown in his official capacity) is a party to a suit, it cannot be required to give discovery of documents at all. No special ground of objection is needed."

Viscount Simon then referred to the well-known observation made by Rigby L. J. in (1897) 2 Q. B. 384,[9] the truth of which has never been open to question:

"....the law is that the Crown is entitled to full discovery and that the subject as against the Crown is not. That is a prerogative of the Crown, part of the Law of England, and we must administer it as we find it....Now I know that there has always been the utmost care to give to a defendant that discovery which the Crown would have been compelled to give if in a position of a subject, unless there be some plain overruling principle of public interest concerned which cannot be disregarded."

[6] I wish particularly to emphasise here that this particular prerogative, with which we are concerned, can only be claimed when the Crown is a party to a suit. A glance at the history of the law will show that this prerogative has been carefully preserved and kept intact by legislation in England. There was a time when no suit could be instituted against the Crown at all. Even after the Crown could be sued by a petition of right, suits by and against the Crown (informations and petitions of rights) had to be instituted in special forms which were essentially different from those of other suits (actions) between subject and subject, and the procedure and practice applicable to Crown suits (Crown practice) has always been different. In a suit by the Crown, (information or information and bill) the informant acting on behalf of the Crown gives the Court to understand and be informed of the facts alleged and prays for such relief as the Crown desires. Under the Petitions of Rights Act of 1860 the suit had to be in the form of a petition made by a suppliant addressed to Her Majesty The Queen which had to be

"left with the Secretary of State for the Home Department, in order that the same may be submitted to Her Majesty for Her Majesty's gracious consideration and in order that Her Majesty, if she shall think fit, may grant her fiat that right be done."

Her Majesty could grant or refuse her fiat at her pleasure. It was not the absolute duty of the Attorney-General to advise the grant of the fiat in every case, although, where the petition disclosed a reasonable and probable ground of claim and a real cause of action, the fiat in practice was invariably granted. The fiat could be granted to the whole or part of the petition, and the petition could not be set down for trial until the fiat was granted. (Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. IX, para. 1180, p. 694). The rules of the Supreme Court framed under the Judicature Acts only apply to Crown suits, in so far as the rules have been specifically made applicable to such suits; and apart from such specific application, the procedure applicable is governed by the Crown Suits Act, the Exchequer Rules, and the traditional procedure of the King's Remembrancer's Department. (Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. IX, paras. 1162 and 1184). All the prerogative rights of the Crown have to be regarded as existing except in so far as they have been specifically taken away by statutes. The only Orders of the Rules of the Supreme Court made applicable to Crown suits under the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, are those mentioned in O. 68, R. 2 of the R. S. C., which do not include O. 31, which deals with discovery and inspection.

[7] Section 7, Petition of Rights Act of 1860 provided:

"So far as the same may be applicable....the laws and statutes in force as to pleading....and the practice and course of procedure of the said Courts of law and equity respectively for the time being in reference to such suits and personal actions, shall....be applicable and apply and extend to such petition of right....."

and it was urged in (1874) 10 Q. B. 44,[10] that this section extended to petitions of right all the statutes relating to pleadings, evidence, hearing and trial and the means of procuring and taking evidence, and, as discovery was included in this, it was argued that a suppliant could obtain discovery in a petition of right. Section 50, Common Law Procedure Act of 1854 was as follows:

"Upon the application of either party to any cause or civil proceeding in any of the superior Courts, upon an affidavit by such party of his belief that any document, to the production of which he is entitled for the purpose of discovery or otherwise, is in the possession or power of the opposite party, it shall be lawful for the Court or Judge to order that the party against whom such application is made, or if such party is a body corporate, shall answer an affidavit, stating what documents he or they has or have in his or their possession or power relating to the matters in dispute or what he knows as to the custody they or any of them are in, and whether he or they objects or object (and if so, on what grounds) to the production of such as are in his or their possession or power; and upon such affidavit being made the Court or Judge may make such further order thereon as shall be just."

Cockburn C. J. discharging the rule stated:

"If it had been intended to extend S. 50, Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, as to discovery of documents, to the case of petitions or right, there would have been inserted some enactment saying an officer should answer, as in the case of bodies corporate."

Technically the Queen could not be sued in her own Court, and having regard to the nature of a petition of right, it was legally and technically impossible to order Her Majesty the Queen to make an answer on affidavit. No one else could in law be compelled to make such an answer. Discovery could only be ordered against a party, and not against the Queen or anyone who was a stranger to the cause: cf. Halsbury's Laws of England, vol. X, para. 420, p. 347.

[8] Before leaving the subject of the law in England, the relevant law with regard to corporation requires to be noticed. A corporation can sue and be sued, like any subject, and the procedure applicable to corporations when parties to a suit is the same as that applicable to other parties (with of course the modifications necessitated by the fact of a corporation being a corporation). A corporation can obtain discovery and inspection from the other party, and can be compelled to make discovery and give inspection. Unlike the Crown, corporation can be sued in contracts and in tort, and can even be indicted and fined for criminal offences: cf. Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. VIII, Ss. 4, 5 and 6, paras. 159-179. Even where a corporation is incorported for public purposes, by a public Act, it cannot claim to be in the same position as the Crown. In (1886) 31 Ch. D 607,[11] Lindley L. J. stated:

". . . . no authority has been cited to show that this particular corporation, incorported by the Act of 1855 for certain public purposes, is to be treated as the Crown, and there is no ground for holding that a corporation specially incorporated in this way is in the same position as regards costs as the Crown."

and the corporation was ordered to pay the costs. In (1901) 2 K. B. 781,[12] Phillimore J. pointed out that even when a public corporation could probably be described as "a nominal defendant sued as representing one of the departments of the State," using his description as Lindley L. J., did in (1886) 17 Q. B. D. 658,[13-14] the mere fact of its incorporation conferred upon it "the privilege of suing and the liability to be sued," like subjects. No case has been cited before us, except one of the E. I. Coy. which will be referred to later, in which any corporation has even put forward the claim that it was entitled to the prerogative, which the Crown could claim, of being exempt from the liability to make discovery and give inspection, and it appears to me to be beyond question that the fact that corporations, unlike the Crown, can sue and be sued in the same manner as other subjects, in suits to which the ordinary procedure applies, necessarily subjects them to the ordinary rules of procedure, and makes it impossible for them to put forward any such claim.

[9] It is of course true that apart from matters relating to the ordinary rules of procedure applicable to all parties to a suit, it is open to a corporation to show that it was suing or being sued as the representative or agent of the Crown, and to ask the Court to take into consideration and give effect to such prerogative rights as it could claim as an agent of the Crown. As Phillimore J., said, in (1901) 2 K. B. 781[12] in such a case,

"The procedure amounts to obtaining a decision in the nature of a decision upon a hypothesis, namely if the person sued were a subject, what would be the decision of the Court on the case brought against him? The principle which is found in the Merchant Shipping Act is a useful one to consider; it shews that the Crown is the real entity pursued, although through the medium of a subject, and the privileges which the Crown has as to the mode of trial apply to such cases. In (1886) 17 Q.B.D. 658,[13-14] the Secretary of the Board of Trade was sued for the act of his subordinate in detaining a ship supposed to be unseaworthy. The Attorney-General of the day claimed, and successfully maintained his claim, to treat the action as a suit against the Crown, and to exercise the prerogative right of the Crown to lay the venue in whatever country it pleased."

[10] In (1920) 2 K. B. 233[15] Banks L. J., stated:

"The defendants plead the Statute of Limitations. To that the plaintiffs answer that they are suing as the representatives of the Crown to recover this money, and that the Statute of Limitations does not apply as against the Crown. Two cases have been referred to, (1901) 2 K. B. 781,[12] and (1915) 1 K. B. 45,[16] both of which make it clear that if a body, whether incorporated or not, is in fact acting in any particular matter as agents of the Crown, they are to be treated in law as such agents, and from that it follows that the Statute of Limitations does not apply to them. In this case I have no hestitation in coming to the conclusion that the plaintiffs are merely acting in their capacity as agents of the Crown in endeavouring to recover this money, although they possess a statutory right to bring the action in their own name. In (1886) 18 Q. B. D. 43,[17] Lindley L. J., dealing with a case where the Secretary of the Board of Trade was being sued, said (2) that the defendant was a nominal defendant sued as representing one of the departments of the State. Here the position is transposed; the plaintiffs are nominal plaintiffs suing as representing one of the departments of the State."

It must be noticed that the prerogative rights which may be so claimed do not in any manner affect the fact that in any suit to which the corporation is a party, the procedure applicable, as regards discovery and inspection and other matters, is the same as in any suit (action) between subject and subject. In (1921) 3 K. B. 1,[18] Greer J., stated:

"I want to add one word about (1878) 37 L. T. 469,[19] upon which great reliance was placed by counsel for the claimants, in order to point out that that was not from any point of view a proceeding between the Crown and the subject. It was a proceeding between a party and the Secretary to the Board of Trade as representing the Board of Trade. It was not contended and could not have been contended that the liability of the Secretary or of the Board was a liability of the Crown. It was an action for the purpose of determining the liability of the Secretary of the Board for wrongful acts and trespasses committed by inspectors acting on behalf of the Board, and in no circumstances could a claim of that kind be made against the Crown. Therefore in that case, so far as the Court deals with discovery at all, it deals with the matter on the assumption that it is deciding a case between parties who are both subjects of the Crown, and not a case in which one of the parties is the Crown itself."

Order 31, R. S. C., applies in all suits by or against corporations. It is only in Crown suits, informations and petitions of right, to which O. 31 does not apply, that the Crown's prerogative in the matter of discovery and inspection may still be claimed.

[11] I will next turn to the position in India. The East India Company was incorporated by its Charter in 1600. For a long time thereafter, and even after the battle of Plassey, it remained a purely trading corporation, without any sovereign rights. In 1 M. I. A. 175[20] at p. 272, Lord Brougham speaking of the situation of Calcutta stated :

"The district on which Calcutta is built was obtained by purchase from the Nabob of Bengal, the Emperor of Hindostan's Lieutenant, at the very end of the seventeenth century. The Company had been struggling for nearly a hundred years to obtain a footing in Bengal, and till 1696, they never had more than a Factory here and there, as the French Danes and Dutch also had. Till 1678, their whole object was to obtain the power of trading, and it was only then that they secured it by a Firman from the Emperor, from that year till 1696, they in vain applied to the native Government for leave to fortify their Factory on the Hooghly, and it was only then that they made a fortification, acting upon a kind of half consent, given in an equivocal answer of the Nabab. Encouraged by the protection which they were thus enabled to afford the natives, many of them built houses, as well as the English subjects; and when the Nabob, on this account, was about to send a Kazi, or Judge, to administer justice to those natives, the Company's servants bribed him to abstain from this proceeding. Some years afterwards the Company obtained a grant of more land and villages from the Emperor, with renewed permission to fortify their Factories during all this period tribute was paid to the Emperor, or his Officer, the Nabob; first, for leave to trade, afterwards as Zamindars, under the Emperor; and in 1757, the year memorable for the battle of Plassey, the treaty with Jaffier Ally, indemnifying them for their losses, ceding the French possessions, and securing their rights, and binding them to pay their revenues like other 'Zamindars.' Eight years later, they likewise received from the native Government a grant of the Dewanny or receivership of Bengal, Behar, and Orissa; and of their subsequent progress in power it is unnecessary to speak; enough has been said to show, that the settlement of the Company in Bengal was effected by leave of a regularly established Government in possession of the country, invested with the rights of sovereignty, and exercising its powers; that by permission of that Government, Calcutta was founded and the Factory fortified, in a district purchased from the owners of the soil by permission of that Government, and held under it by the Company as subjects owing obedience, as tenants rendering rent, and even as officers exercising, by delegation, a part of its administrative authority. At what precise time, and by what steps, they exchanged the character of subjects for that of sovereign, or rather, acquired by themselves, or with the help of the Crown, and for the Crown, the rights of sovereignty, cannot be ascertained. The sovereignty has long since been vested in the Crown, and though it was at first recognized in terms by the Legislature in 1813; the Statute 53, Geo. III. c. 155, S. 95 is declaratory and refers to the sovereignty as 'undoubted,' and as residing in the Crown; but it is equally certain, that for a long period of time after the first acquisition, no such rights were claimed, nor any acts of sovereignty exercised; and that during all that time no English authority existed there, which could affect the land or bind any but English subjects. The Company and its servants were then in the situation of the Smyrna or the Lisbon Factories at the present time."

The Courts established by the Company by virtue of the powers conferred by the Charter of 1726 were Courts established in factories in foreign territory where all except the English servants of the Company were foreign subjects: 9 M. I. A. 387.[21] Even after it was recognized, in 1813, that the Company exercised sovereign powers within its territories, subject to the suzerainty of the Crown of England, it continued to sue and be sued as a subject, as a corporation. No prerogative could be claimed by it, in suits to which it was a party, and it was subject to the same liabilities as individuals in contracts as well as in torts. In the Indian Courts, trials were held in accordance with the Muhammadan Law of Procedure up to Regulation VI of 1832. Sir Barnes Peacock C. J. stated in 5 B. H. C. R. App. A 1[22] :

"In determining the question whether the East India Company would, under the circumstances, have been liable to an action, the general principles applicable to Sovereigns and States, and the reasoning deduced from the maxim of the English law that the King can do no wrong, would have no force. We concur entirely in the opinion expressed by the Chief Justice Grey in Brignell, Rep., p., 120,[23] which was cited in the argument, that the fact of the Company's having been invested with powers usually called sovereign powers did not constitute them sovereigns."

"We are further of opinion that the East India Company were not sovereigns; and, therefore, could not claim all the exemptions of a sovereign; and that they were not the public servants of Government, and, therefore, did not fall under the principle of the cases with regard to the liabilities of such persons; but they were a company to whom sovereign powers were delegated, and who traded on their own account and for their own benefit, and were engaged in transactions partly for the purposes of Government, and partly on their own account, which, without any delegation of sovereign rights, might be carried on by private individuals. There is a great and clear distinction between acts done in the exercise of what are usually termed sovereign powers, and acts done in the conduct of undertakings which might be carried on by private individuals without having such powers delegated to them."

At pages 13 and 14 of the same case, Sir Barnes Peacock refers to a case, which is of particular interest here, in which an order of discovery was made against the East India Company. The plaintiffs in that case intended to make a claim against the Company in respect of an alleged breach of a contract of lease for 10 years of the right to supply the inhabitants of Madras with tobacco, and filed a bill for a commission and discovery. While overruling the demurrer by the Company, Lord Kenyon, the Master of the Rolls, said:

"I admit that no suit will lie in this Court against a sovereign power for anything done in that capacity, but I do not think the East India Company is within the rule. They have rights as a sovereign power; they have also duties as individuals. If they enter into bonds in India, the sums secured may be recovered here; so in this case as a private company they have entered into a private contract, to which they must be liable. Here is a prima facie ground of action; the Company has put other persons in the way of doing the plaintiffs an injury;"

It is therefore clear that the East India Company could not claim to be exempt from the liability of being ordered to make discovery and give inspection, by virtue of its character as a Company possessing sovereign rights.

[12] The question then is, has the prerogative in question been assumed and exercised by the Crown in India, after it took over the Government of India in 1858, or has the prerogative been taken away by the statutory law applicable to India? The two enactments which we have specially to consider are the Government of India Act of 1858, and the Civil Procedure Code, Act 8 of 1859. With regard to the effect of the Act of 1858, Sir Barnes Peacock stated in 5 B. H. C. R. App. A 1:[22].

"The question as to the liability of the Secretary of State in Council to be sued depends upon the Act 21st and 22nd Vict., c. 106, for the better Government of India, and turns principally upon the construction of the 65th section. The main object of that section was to transfer to Her Majesty the possession and government of the British territories in India, which were then vested in the East India Company in trust for the Crown, but it does not appear to have been the intention of the Legislature to alter the nature or extent of liabilities with which the revenue of India should be chargeable; and accordingly we find it expressly enacted by the 42nd section that 'the dividends on the capital stock of the said Company secured by the Act of the 3rd & 4th William IV., c. 85, until the redemption thereof, and all the bond, debenture, and other debt, of the said Company in Great Britain, and all the territorial debt, and all other debts of the said Company, and all sums of money, costs, charges and expenses, which, if this Act had not been passed, would after the time appointed for the commencement thereof, have been payable by the said Company out of the revenues of India, in respect or by any reason of any treaties, covenants, contracts, grants or liabilities then existing, and all expenses, debts and liabilities which after the commencement of this Act shall be lawfully contracted and incurred on account of the Government of India and all payments under this Act, shall be charged and chargeable upon the revenues of India alone, as the same would have been if this Act had not been passed, and such expenses, debts, liabilities and payments as last aforesaid had been expenses, debts and liabilities lawfully contracted and incurred by the said Company; and such revenues shall not be applied to any other purpose whatsoever; and all other monies vested in, or arising or accruing from, property or rights vested in Her Majesty under this Act, or to be received or disposed of by the Council under this Act, shall be applied in aid of such revenues. But as the Queen could not be sued, as the East India Company could have been, in her own Court, it was necessary to provide for the mode of enforcing such liabilities; and therefore, after providing by S. 64, 'that all Acts and provisions then in force, by charter or otherwise, concerning India, should, subject to the provisions of the Act continue in force, and be construed as referring to the Secretary of State in Council in the place of the said Company, and the Court of Directors and Court of Proprietors thereof,' it was enacted by S. 65 that 'the Secretary of State in Council should and might sue and be sued as a Body corporate, and that all persons might have and take the same remedies and proceedings, legal and equitable against the Secretary of State in Council as they could have done against the East India Company, and that the property and effects thereby vested in Her Majesty for the purposes of the Government of India, or acquired for the said purposes, should be subject and liable to the same judgments and executions as they would, while vested in the Company, have been liable to, in respect of debts and liabilities lawfully contracted and incurred by the said Company'."

"17. The recognised agents of parties by whom such applications and appearances may be made are:

* * *

3rdly. Persons being ex officio or otherwise authorised to act for Government in respect of any suit or judicial proceeding.

* * *

26. The plaint shall be distinctly written in the language in ordinary use in proceedings before the Court, and shall contain the following particulars:

1. The name, description, and place of abode of the plaintiff.

2. The name, description, and place of abode of the defendant, so far as they can be ascertained.

* * *

6. In all suits by or against the Government, or one of its officers in his official capacity, or any corporation, or any Company authorized to sue and be sued in the name of an officer or trustees 'the words, 'the Government', or 'the collector of' or otherwise, as the case may be, or the name of Corporation, or the name or names of the officer or trustees of the Company, shall be inserted in Nos. 1 and 2, instead of the name and description of the plaintiff or defendant, but in all other cases it shall be necessary to specify the names of all the parties.

Of suits against Government and Public Officers.

67. If the suit be against the Government, the summons shall be served on the Government Pleader. The Court, in fixing the day for the Government to answer the plaint, shall allow a reasonable time for the necessary communication with the Government through the proper channels, and for the issue of instructions to the Government Pleader to appear and answer on behalf of the Government, and may extend the time at its discretion on the application of the Government Pleader. The Court may also, if it think proper, direct the attendance of a person who may be able to answer all material questions relating to the suit.

68. If the suit be against an officer of the Government for an act which the plaintiff alleges to have been done by such officer in his official capacity, the summons shall be served upon such officer in the manner hereinbefore provided.

69. If the officer, on receiving the summons, shall consider it proper to make a reference to Government before answering to the plaint, he may move the Court to grant such extension of the time fixed in the summons as may be necessary to enable him to make such reference and to receive orders thereon through the proper channels; and the Court upon such motion may extend the time for so long as shall appear to it to be requisite.

70. If the Government shall undertake the defence of the suit, the Government Pleader shall be furnished with authority to appear and answer to the plaint; and upon motion made by him, the Court shall order a note to that effect to be entered in the register.

71. If such motion shall not be made by the Government Pleader on or before the day fixed in the notice for the defendant to appear and answer to the plaint, the case shall proceed as in a suit between private parties, except that the defendant shall not be liable to arrest before judgment.

72. If in any such suit the Court shall require the personal appearance of the defendant, and the defendant shall satisfy the Court that he cannot absent himself from his duty without injury to the public service, the Court shall exempt him from such appearance; but he shall be liable to be examined in any way in which an absent witness may be examined.

Of the production of Documents.

128. The parties or their pleaders shall bring with them, and have in readiness at the first hearing of the suit, to be produced when called upon by the Court, all their documentary evidence of every description which may not already have been filed in Court, and all documents, writings, or other things which may have been specified in any notice which may have been served on them respectively within a reasonable time before the hearing of the suit, and no documentary evidence of any kind, which the parties or any of them may desire to produce, shall be received by the Court at any subsequent stage of the proceedings, unless good cause be shown to its satisfaction for the non-production thereof at the first hearing.

129. All exhibits produced by the parties shall be received and inspected by the Court; but it shall be competent to the Court, after inspection to reject any exhibit which it may consider irrelevant or otherwise inadmissible, recording the grounds of such rejection."

The words in S. 71, "the case shall proceed as in a suit between private parties" deserve particularly to be noticed. In 40 I. A. 48,[24] Lord Haldane speaks of "the substantial right of the subject to sue the Government in the civil Courts like any other defendant" conferred by the Act of 1858, and of "the fundamental principle that the Secretary of State, even as representing the Crown, is to be in no position different from that of the old East India Company." In 5 B. H. C. R. App. A. 1,[22] Sir Barnes Peacock pointed out that by the Act of 1858 the revenues of India were constituted a fund, entirely apart from the English Exchequer, and that an action against the Secretary of State in Council, sued as a Body Corporate, was the proper mode of getting at that fund. It is beyond question now that a Government department in India cannot claim the prerogative by virtue of which the Crown in England could not be sued either in contract or in tort. That is because the Secretary of State was made liable where the East India Company would have been liable. It seems to me to be equally clear that the Crown's prerogative, of exemption from the liability to make discovery and give inspection was also taken away. It is impossible to contend that the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code of 1859 did not apply to the Secretary of State, who was sued like any other defendant, or that the position of the Crown in India was similar to that in England, where O. 31 of the R. S. C. is still not applicable to Crown suits. The provisions enacting that the Secretary of State can sue and be sued as a Body Corporate and like any other subject, necessarily subject him to all the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code, including O. 11, and thereby make it impossible for the Crown in India to contend that the position of the Secretary of State was not "like any other defendant", or "different from that of the old East India Company." In my view Lord Haldane's words are conclusive on the matter before us.

[13] The position has not been materially altered by the successive amendments and alterations since made in the Code of Civil Procedure. After the Government of India Act of 1935, suits which still then were described as "suits by or against the Government or Public Officers in their official capacity," are described as "suits by or against the Crown or Public Officers in their official capacity," and S. 79 has been altered by the Government of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937, so that the authority to be named has now to be the Governor-General in Council, or the Province, or the Secretary of State, according to the department concerned. The procedure in such suits by or against the Crown continues to be governed by the Code, and is the same as in a suit between subject and subject. The position in India is therefore the same as in Australia, where after the Commonwealth Judiciary Act 1930-1940, the procedure applicable to the State when a party to a suit is the same "as in a suit between subject and subject" and "the state is not only sued as defendant under the authority of statute but is in the suit bound to give discovery." (1931) A. C. 704.[2] The statute thus gives to the subject in India what in England is denied in law but in practice the Crown takes the utmost care to give.

[14] It is of course beyond question that the Crown's prerogatives remain in force except such of them as have been taken away by statute expressly or by necessary implication, and that there are several prerogative rights which the Crown still possesses in India. For instance, it is a prerogative of the Crown that no statute can be said to bind the Crown, unless the statute is made applicable to the Crown in express terms or by necessary implication: A. I. R. 1947 P. C. 34.[25] Another instance is that of Crown debts having precedence over other debts. Two cases were practically relied upon before us as showing that although the Civil Procedure Code was generally applicable to suits in which the Crown was a party, the provisions of the Code were to be regarded as inapplicable to the Crown, as soon as a prerogative of the Crown was shown to be effected. But, in my view, it is impossible to accept this contention. In 1 Bom. 7,[26] the question was whether the Crown could claim that court-fees payable to the Crown in a pauper suit had precedence over the claims of the judgment-creditor. West J. in deciding the point stated :

"The decision of this case turns upon the construction of S. 309, Civil P. C. Its direction that the amount of fees, which would have been paid by the pauper plaintiff, shall, on decision of the suit, be recoverable by Government from any party ordered by the decree to pay the same in the same manner as costs of suit are recoverable, does not preclude the Crown or its representative from urging its prerogative and insisting upon its right to precedence. The circumstances of its being placed in the position of judgment-creditor does not reduce its rights of necessity to those of a private judgment-creditor in case of a contest as to prior satisfaction out of moneys realized in execution."

[15] In 33 Cal. 1040,[27] the plaintiff instituted a suit in forma pauperis against the defendant and obtained a decree. The decree directed that the property in suit should be conveyed to the plaintiff, and the taxing officer was to certify the amount of court-fees, that would have been payable by the plaintiff, had she not sued in forma pauperis, and to tax the plaintiff's other costs of suit. It was also ordered and decreed that the defendants should pay the amount of court-fees to be certified by the Government Solicitor, which should form a first charge on the property conveyed. Thereafter, the plaintiff applied for attachment of other premises belonging to the defendants and obtained an order for sale. The sale proceeds were ordered to be paid into Court, which amounted to Rs. 999-1-8. The plaintiff's attorney then without notice to the Government Solicitor or defendants made an application for payment to him of the amounts realized in execution from the defendants. The Government Solicitor then presented a petition asking that the amount of court-fees certified as due and payable by the defendant to the Government Solicitor in terms of the decree be paid in the first instance and in precedence to all claims. It was held that court-fees form a Crown debt and under ordinary circumstances the principle would apply that the Crown would be entitled to precedence in payment of this debt over all creditors; and that S. 411, Civil P. C. was an enabling section and though it indicated the manner in which Crown may proceed to realise the debt, it did not preclude the Crown or its representatives from urging its prerogative and insisting on its rights to precedence over all other creditors. The comment on this case in Mulla's Civil Procedure Code (1941 Edn, p. 1051) is as follows:

"It is to be observed that in the Calcutta case cited above, C was a creditor of A inasmuch as he was entitled to be paid his costs by A. But he was merely an ordinary creditor as distinguished from a secured creditor. It is also to be observed that court-fees form a Crown debt, and the Crown was to that extent a creditor of A. It has to be borne in mind that it is only when claims of the Crown and claims of ordinary creditors or 'common persons' (to use an old expression) concur or come into competition that the Crown is preferred. The Crown has no more right than a 'common person' to seize X's property and apply it in or towards discharge of a debt due from Y. It was so observed by Lord Macnaghten in a case in which the Privy Council held that where a money decree is obtained by a pauper in a suit by him against Y, and Y is directed by the decree to pay the court-fees, the Government are not entitled to realize the court-fees by a sale of Y's property previously mortgaged by him to X, so as to defeat the right of X. All that could be sold by the Government in such a case is the equity of redemption of Y in the property."

These decisions were made not by disregarding the provisions of the Code but in accordance with them. The Calcutta decision is in accord with the provisions of the Code which are now contained in S. 73 (3) and O. 33, R. 10.

[16] I would, therefore, grant the two applications under O. 11, R. 12 before us. The two plaintiffs will have the costs of this application.

[17] Thadani J.—I concur but I would add a few words. I think the prerogative right of the Crown in India, in the matter of discovery, procedure in regard to which is regulated by O. 11, Civil P. C., has been taken away by reason of S. 276, Government of India Act, 1935, in suits instituted under the provisions of S. 79, Civil P. C., provided the subject matter of the suit is one in respect of which the East India Company could have been sued as a body corporate. If, however, the subject matter of the suit is not one in respect of which the East India Company could have been sued, I think the Crown in India, at any rate up to 15th August 1947, could claim the prerogative right in the matter of discovery. Strictly speaking the question of discovery when the plea to which I have referred is taken does not arise as the plea goes to the root of the Court's jurisdiction.

[18] The question then arises when can such a plea be taken. I think it can properly be taken upon notice issued to the Crown on an application made under the provisions of O. 11, R. 12, Civil P. C. and before the Court can compel the Crown to make discovery, it would have to decide whether the subject matter of the suit is one in respect of which the East India Company could have been sued.

[19] In the two cases referred to us, the learned Advocate General has not contended on behalf of the Crown that the subject-matter of the suits is one in respect of which the East India Company could not have been sued.

Constantine J.—I agree with the judgment of the Hon'ble the Chief Judge, and have nothing to add.

Emperor v. (1) Ak S/o Lalbaksh and (2) Mir Muhammad S/o Budho—Opponents.

Criminal Ref. Nos. 247 and 248 of 1946, Decided on 10-1-1947, from order of Sessions Judge, Larkana.

Penal Code (1860), Ss. 171-D and 171-F—Personation in elections to Legislative Assembly—Proper punishment is rigorous imprisonment and not fine.

Personation in elections to the Legislative Assembly, i.e., recording votes in elections under false name is a serious offence and fine cannot be an adequate punishment. The proper punishment for this offence, even though it be a first, is rigorous imprisonment. [Para 4]

Fatehchand Assudomal, Advocate-General of Sind —for the Crown.

Pribhdas Wadhva and V. N. Gidvani—for Opponents (Nos. 1 & 2 respectively).

Davis C. J.—We have before us two really very serious cases relating to personation in elections to the Sind Legislative Assembly. But apparently the Magistrates who tried these two cases—in one case Mr. A. K. Ukeli, First Class Magistrate, Mehar, and in the other case Mr. Pandhiani, Resident Magistrate of Larkana—have failed completely to understand the necessity of purity in elections, if democratic Government is to function honestly and they have imposed in both cases entirely inadequate sentences of fine and we would make it clear to these Magistrates, and also to other Magistrates in the Province that these offences are so serious that in the ordinary way the only proper sentence to pass is one of rigorous imprisonment. Persons like the accused in these two cases, although they may be ignorant, will come to learn that if they do take slips from corrupt persons and record votes in elections under false names, they will go to prison, even if the names of their corrupt seducers are not known and they thus escape punishment.

[2] In one case, the accused is Mir Muhammad, and he has been convicted of an offence under S. 171-D read with S. 171-F, Penal Code, and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 30 only. This sentence, of course, is ludicrously inadequate. We do not propose to enhance the fine lest it be thought that we in any way consider a fine as an adequate or proper punishment for so serious an offence; in fact we do not. But in this case this Mir Muhammad has pleaded guilty, and although we think that we might well send him to prison for at least six months, he can scarcely be expected to have understood the serious nature of the offence, if as it is perfectly plain, the learned Magistrate appears quite unconecious of the serious nature of this offence; but both this almost illiterate hari and the learned Magistrate must learn. We have told this Mir Muhammad that if he commits a like offence again and it is proved against him then he will go to prison with rigorous imprisonment and we trust that should he come again before a Court and be convicted of an offence of this nature, he will come before a Magistrate with a greater sense of responsibility and a true realisation of the very serious nature of these offences, and that he will if convicted go to prison with rigorous imprisonment for some six months at least.

[3] The second case is one against a gentleman called Ak son of Lalbakhsh Bhutto. He has not like Mir Muhammad pleaded guilty, but given a false defence, presumably on advice as presumably it was on advice, and, we should imagine, as a result of corrupt consideration, that he used the false name of one Gullan son of Lakhidino instead of his own name Ak. son of Lalbakhsh. The evidence of one Radhakrishin Verandmal, a clerk in the Sessions Court of Larkana, calls for adverse comment. It is perfectly clear from his deposition that he is timid and untruthful and we do not think the employment of this particular clerk in the Court of Session, can add to its dignity or its efficiency. He pretends that he cannot recognise the accused Ak; his memory is good enough to enable him to say he thinks that it was a boy who produced the slip EX. 1 A on which a false name was written. But there can be no question of mistaken identity of this Ak. This Radhakrishin reported the matter to the presiding officer at once, gave him the slip, and this accused was then and there arrested. Mr. Kishinchand Shivdasani was then a Presiding Officer; the polling agent, one Ahmed Bakhsh, called his attention to the fact that this Ak was not the person in whose name he had demanded a polling paper. A slip which this Ak produced was shown at once to Kishinchand by Radhakrishin, and Kishinchand at once reported the matter to the police. Ghulam Abbas Kadir was the agent of Khan Bahadur Khuhro at Larkana-Madresah Polling Station for the East Larkana Muslim Constituency. He suspected both Ak and another; he followed them to the Polling Officer, and heard this Ak give his name as Gullan. Gullan Abbas Kadir told one Ahmedbakhsh, as agent of K. B. Khuhro that this Ak was giving a false name, and it was found on inquiry that this was so; so Ahmedbakhsh reported the matter to the presiding officer. Ahmedbakhsh also gives evidence and says that this Ak came to their booth, gave a slip to the Polling Officer, and Ahmedbakhsh then found that the name called out by the Polling Officer on the slip was of one who was dead, and it was this Ak who was personating this dead man. The Sub Inspector of Police who was on duty at this Larkana-Madresah polling station took charge of Ak along with the polling slip and a written report of the presiding Officer.

[4] The defence of the accused is that he is innocent and did not personate—quite clearly a false defence; and for this most serious offence this accused has been fined Rs. 200, an entirely inadequate punishment. We do not propose to enhance the fine, as we have said before, because we do not wish to have it believed that we think under any circumstances for offences of so serious a nature, a fine can be an adequate punishment. But if the Resident Magistrate of Larkana is so unconscious of the serious nature of this offence, it is unlikely that this accused, a hari, was any more conscious of its serious nature. But this Ak has been told, and we hope he understands that we regard the proper punishment for this offence, even though it be a first, as rigorous imprisonment, and when once sentences of this nature are imposed for these offences it will soon get known among these ignorant persons, now possessed of this power and responbility of voting for members of the Legislative Assembly, from whose ranks His Excellency's Ministers are chosen, that offences of this nature would ordinarily be punished by rigorous imprisonment.

[5] We think we should draw the attention of the District Magistrate Larkana to the inadequate sentences passed upon the accused persons, these impersonators, and the desirability in the public interest that he should keep a close watch upon his criminal returns and do his best to see that these very serious offences are adequately dealt with by subordinate Magistrates and adequately punished, and if necessary reference for enhancement made to this Court. For reasons, however, we have given, we return these references.

Second Appeal No. 17 of 1943, Decided on 1-9-1947, against judgment of Dist. Judge, Hyderabad.

(a) Limitation Act (1908), Art. 182 (5) — Step-in-aid of execution — Application for execution to transferee Court by person before being brought on record as legal representative of deceased decree-holder is not step-in-aid of execution — Civil P. C. (1908), O. 21, R. 16.

A transferee of a decree must apply in execution to the Court which passed the decree though the decree may have been sent for execution to another Court. A Court to which a decree is transferred for execution is not the proper Court within the meaning of Art. 182, Cl. (5), Limitation Act. Hence an execution application to the transferee Court made by a person who had not been brought on record as the legal representative of the decree-holder, cannot be considered as a step-in-aid of execution. [Para 9]

(b) Precedents—Ruling of Court of Judicial Commissioner is not binding on Chief Court.

A ruling of the Court of Judicial Commissioner of Sind, though entitled to great weight, is not binding on the Chief Court of Sind. [Para 13]

(c) Limitation Act (1908), Art. 182 (5) — Step-in-aid of execution — Application by heir of deceased decree-holder merely to be brought on record as legal representative made to Court which passed decree is step-in-aid of execution.

A prayer to have the name of a legal representative or assignee entered in place of the decree-holder is implied in an application under O. 21, R. 16, for execution of a decree by such legal representative or assignee, and when the legal representative or assignee makes an application to have his name substituted for the decree-holder and to have intimation sent to the transferee Court, as a preliminary to, and to enable him to make an execution application to the transferee Court it cannot be said that such an application is in contravention of the law, much less can it be said to be not an application asking the Court to take a step-in aid of execution of the decree. The step of substituting the legal representative of the deceased judgment creditor is a step which must be treated as in accordance with the spirit as well as the letter of the law. Hence an application to the Court which passed decree by an heir of a deceased decree-holder to be brought on record as legal representative and without praying for execution is a step-in-aid of execution within meaning of Art. 182 (5) : Case law referred. [Paras 28 & 29]

Keshewdas Dalpatrai—for Appellant.

Manghanmal Bhojraj — for Respondent.

Judgment. — This is an appeal against a judgment of the learned District Judge, Hyderabad, setting aside an order of the learned Sub-Judge, Tando Mahomed Khan, who had dismissed an execution application as time barred.

[2] The facts of the case out of which this appeal has arisen are as follows: Seoomal, the husband of the plaintiff-respondent had obtained a money decree against the defendant-appellant. On 27-8-1938, an execution application filed by Seoomal was disposed of. After that Seoomal died and on 7-4-1941, his widow, Lachmibai, who is the respondent in the appeal, filed an execution application in the Court of the Sub-Judge, Tando Mahomed Khan, to whom the decree had been transferred for execution. The learned Judge held that the legal representative should have first applied under O. 21, R. 16, Civil P. C. to the Court which passed the decree to have her name entered as the transferee by operation of law and he dismissed the execution application. On that very day, 27-8-1941, Lachmibai made an application to the Shahdadpur Court, which had originally passed the decree, praying that she be joined as the legal representative of deceased Seoomal. The Shahdadpur Court passed an order joining Lachmibai as the legal representative of Seoomal in the decree. On the strength of that order, an execution application was filed by Lachmibai on 20-12-1941, in the Court of the Sub-Judge, Tando Mahomed Khan. The learned Sub-Judge came to the conclusion that neither the execution application of 7th April 1941, nor the application dated 27th August 1941, made to the Shahdadpur Court could be considered as step in aid in execution and he dismissed the application as time barred.

[3] In appeal, the learned District Judge came to the conclusion that the application dated 27th August 1941, made to the Shahdadpur Court could not be considered as a step in aid in execution, but the execution application of 7th April 1941, made by Lachmibai to the Sub-Judge, Tando Mahomed Khan, before she was joined as the legal representative of Seoomal, was made to the proper Court within the meaning of Art. 182, Limitation Act, and could be considered as a step in aid of the execution; that the period of limitation of three years would run from that date and so the execution application filed on 20th December 1941, was in time. He accordingly ordered that the papers should be sent to the Sub-Judge to proceed with the execution in accordance with law.

[4] It has been urged in the appeal that the learned District Judge was in error in holding that the execution application of 7th April 1941, was made to the proper Court and was in accordance with law. The learned District Judge in his judgment observed that though this application was made by Lachmibai before she had applied to be joined as the legal representative of deceased Seoomal it was one in accordance with law. He relied on two reported cases. The first is one decided by the Calcutta High Court and reported in 20 Cal. 755.[1] In that case the facts were that the heirs of a deceased decree-holder made an application in execution. At the time of the application, the heirs had neither taken out a succession certificate nor had they applied for substitution of their names on the record. The Munsiff directed the applicants to obtain a certificate. On their failing to do so, he rejected the application for execution. The heirs then obtained a succession certificate and applied for execution. It was held that the first application made by the heirs before they had obtained a succession certificate was in accordance with law within the meaning of Art. 179, cl. (4), Limitation Act. The reasoning given in that case is that both the Civil Procedure Code and the Limitation Act were passed long before the succession certificate had been granted and, therefore whatever interpretation may be put on the word "application" as used in the Code of Civil Procedure and the Limitation Act, it could in no way depend upon the Succession Certificate Act.

[5] The other case relied upon by the learned District Judge is the case in 4 I. C. 118.[2] In that case it was held that an application for execution by the executors of the original decree-holder though probate had not then been obtained, if proper in form, was a step in aid of execution.

[6] On the anology of those rulings, the learned District Judge in the judgment under appeal came to the conclusion that the application made by Lachmibai before she was joined as a legal representative was still in accordance with law.

[7] It seems to me that the principles on which the two cases referred to by the learned Judge were decided have no application to the facts of this case. The Code of Civil Procedure does not require that the legal representatives must obtain a succession certificate or probate before taking out execution. But the Code makes provision for legal representatives to be brought on record and under S. 47, Civil P. C., where question arises as to whether any person is or is not the representative of a party, such questions are to be determined by the Court.

[8] Under Art. 182, cl. (5), Limitation Act, time runs from the date of the final order passed on an application made in accordance with law to the proper Court for execution, or to take some step in aid of execution of the decree or order.

[9] Under O. 21, R. 16, Civil P. C., when the interest of decree-holder is transferred under operation of law the transferee has to apply for execution of the decree to the Court which passed it. It is, therefore, clear that a transferee of a decree must apply in execution to the Court which passed the decree though the decree may have been sent for execution to another Court. A Court to which a decree is transferred for execution is not the proper Court within the meaning of Art. 182, cl. (5), Limitation Act. I am, therefore, of opinion that the execution application of 7-4-1941, made by a person who has not been brought on record as the legal representative of the decree-holder, and which application was not made to the proper Court, could not be considered as step in aid of execution.

[10] Mr. Manghanmal, who appeared for the respondent, was not able to advance any arguments in support of the finding of the learned District Judge that the application dated 7-4-1941 was a step in aid of an execution. He has, however, supported the judgment of the learned District Judge on other grounds which were decided by the learned Judge against the respondent, and this he is entitled to do in view of the provisions of O. 41, R. 22, Civil P. C.

[11] He has urged that the learned District Judge was wrong in holding that the application made by the respondent to the Shahdadpur Court on 27-8-1941, could not be considered as a step in aid in execution. Now, if this application can properly be considered as a step in aid in execution, then it would save limitation, for the last execution application by the deceased Seoomal was disposed of on 27-8-1938.

[12] In coming to the conclusion that the application dated 27-8-1941, made to the Shahdadpur Court cannot properly be considered as a step-in-aid in execution, the learned District Judge relied on a case decided by the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Sind, A. I. R. 1933 Sind 341,[3] in which it was held that an application by a transferee to be brought on the record without asking for execution of the decree was not an application in accordance with law, as it was not an application for execution of the decree. In that case Rupchand J. C. further expressed that it could not be said that such an application could be considered as a step in aid.

[13] Now, if this case is good law, then the application made by the respondents on 27-8-1941, cannot be considered as a step-in-aid in execution. The ruling of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Sind, though entitled to great weight, is not binding on this Court. With respect I am unable to agree with the view that such an application cannot be considered as an application in accordance with law or as a step-in-aid of a execution.

[14] In a case decided by the Full Bench of the Bombay High Court in 196 I. C. 1[4] it was held that it was no doubt open to an assignee of a decree to make two applications, one under R. 16 to get the assignment recognized and a further application giving particulars of the methods in which execution is prayed and that in a case where there are any complications or where the decree has been transferred for execution at the instance of a decree-holder to another Court, that may be a desirable course.

[15] In I. L. R. (1946) Kar. 371,[5] O'Sullivan J. expressed agreement with this Full Bench view and observed :

"It seems to me, in the light of the opinion, that the filing of the application to get the assignment recognized would clearly be a step-in-aid of execution."

[16] In A. I. R. 1933 Rang. 55,[6] it was held that although an application by an assignee to get his name substituted is not an application for execution, it is an application asking the Court to take a step-in-aid of execution.

[17] In that case Baguley J., observed :

"It seems to me from first principles also that, although this application was not an application for execution, it was an application asking the Court to take a step-in-aid of execution. Under O. 21, R. 16, no doubt the transferree might file an application for execution, but he could not get execution in any form until after the notice mentioned in the proviso had been issued and the Court had heard objection to execution if any. The application was made in the present case in effect merely to get rid of the clog which is to be found to the assignee's freedom of action in Pro. 1, R. 16, and if a person asks the Court to free him from an impediment which clogs his freedom of action in executing his decree, he must be regarded as asking the Court to take a step in aiding him to execute the decree. There is authority that the Courts must not take too strict a view of technicalities of this description."

[18] In 31 Mad. 234,[7] where the facts were that an application was made purporting to be under S. 232, Civil P. C., by the transferee of a decree, praying to be recognized as assignee plaintiff in the suit, and, stating that when so recognized, he would file an execution petition, i. e., when the Court passed an order as prayed for, and the defendant did not appeal against such order it was held that the application was a step-in-aid of execution, and an application in accordance with law within the meaning of Art. 179 (4) of Sch. II, Limitation Act.

[19] In that case the application was made to the Court which passed the decree but the objection taken was that it was merely an application for substitution and not one for execution as required under S. 232 of the old Code of Civil Procedure (corresponding to O. 21, R. 16, Civil P.C.).

[20] The learned Judge answered the objection as follows :

"We are unable to agree with this conclusion. The petition, as appears from its terms, was intended as a step in aid of execution, as it sought the recognition by the Court of the petitioner's right to execute which recognition it was open to the Court to grant or withhold. The question then arises was it an application in accordance with law? It is, no doubt true, as pointed out by Sir Bhashyam Aiyangar in 14 M. L. J. 393,[8] that S. 232, Civil P. C., does not provide for an application in this form, but contemplates that the transferee should apply for execution of the decree without any preliminary of the kind, merely giving notice of the application to the transferor and the judgment-debtor. Consequently, when, instead of applying for execution, the appellant put in his application for recognition as transferee, the Court might have returned the petition to him for amendment as not in accordance with the section. Instead of doing this, the Court made the order prayed for and the defendant did not appeal against it as he might have done. Under these circumstances the application must be taken to have been in accordance with law."

It may be noted that in the case decided by the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Sind, referred to above, Rupchand J. C. sought to distinguish this Madras case and did not dissent from it.

[21] In 50 ALL. 621,[9] it was held, following this Madras case, that an application for substitution of names is a step-in-aid of execution. That decision followed an earlier decision of the Allahabad High Court, 29 ALL. 301,[10] in which it was held that an application made by the transferee of a decree asking that his name might be substituted on the record for that of the original decree-holder and a further application asking for time to serve one of the judgment-debtors, whose address was not then known, with notice of the application for substitution were both applications made to the proper Court to take some step-in-aid of execution within the meaning of Art. 179 of Sch. 2, Limitation Act, 1877.

[22] In A. I. R. 1938 Nag. 191,[11] Puranik J. following an older decision of that Court reported in A. I. R. 1927 Nag. 308[12] held that an application for substitution of names in place of the original decree-holder is a step-in-aid of execution and saves limitation. That learned Judge went on to say :

"A. I. R. 1933 Sind 341[3] no doubt lays down that an application by a transferee to be brought on record without asking for execution of a decree is not an application in accordance with law, as it is not an application for execution of the decree. The view is not in accordance with the view taken in A. I. R. 1927 Nag. 308,[12] and on a plain reading of Art. 182, cl. (5) I respectfully dissent from the view taken in that case."

[23] I agree, with respect, with the views of the Bombay, Madras, Allahabad and Nagpur High Courts cited above.

[24] In K. J. Rustomji's Law of Limitation, at p. 1772, Edn. 5, that learned Commentator has made the following observation in a foot note :

"In Sind, however, it has been held that since under O. 21, R. 16, Civil P.C. a transferee decree-holder cannot apply merely for recognizing him as transferee, but can only apply to execute the decree, an application by the transferee decree-holder merely to be brought on record without a prayer for execution of the decree, is not a step in aid so as to save limitation. 147 I. C. 470;[13] 159 I. C. 807[14] (both being Sind decisions). But the soundness of this view is doubtful, as it is well settled that an application by the transferee decree-holder for substitution of names is a step in aid of execution."

[25] In the present case, the application filed by the respondent for bringing his name on record reads as follows :

"It is submitted on behalf of the plaintiff that the decree papers of the above suit have been transferred to Tando Mahomed Khan Court. However, plaintiff Seoomal has died on about 9-3-1941, and his legal heir and representative is his wife and survivor, Sh. Lachmibai. None else but she is the heir of the deceased. Hence it is prayed that the Hon'ble Court may be pleased to appoint her as legal representative of the deceased Seoomal and join her as such in the category of the plaintiff, and intimate the same to Tando Mahomed Khan Court."

[26] This application was not rejected by the Court as not in accordance with law, but granted and it was ordered : "Lachmibai to be joined as heir of the plaintiff."

[27] This enabled the respondent to proceed in execution against the appellant in the Tando Mahomed Khan Court to which the decree had already been transferred. How can it be said then that it was not a step-in-aid ? If the respondent had made the application to the Shahdadpur Court in the form of an execution application, then the column relating to "the mode in which the assistance of the Court is required" would have had to be left blank, as the respondent wanted execution within the limits of the Tando Mahomed Khan Court to which the decree had already been transferred.

[28] A prayer to have the name of a legal representative or assignee entered in place of the decree-holder is implied in an application under O. 21, R. 16, for execution of a decree by such legal representative or assignee, and when the legal representative or assignee makes an application to have his name substituted for the decree-holder and to have intimation sent to the transferee Court, as a preliminary to and to enable him to make an execution application to the transferee Court, it cannot be said that such an application is in contravention of the law, much less can it be said to be not an application asking the Court to take a step-in-aid of execution of the decree. The step of substituting the legal representative of the deceased judgment-creditor is a step which must be treated as in accordance with the spirit as well as the letter of the law.

[29] For the foregoing reasons I have come to the conclusion that the application made by the respondent on 17-8-1941 may properly be considered as an application made to the proper Court in accordance with law, asking it to take some step in-aid of execution of the decree. I, therefore, hold, though on grounds different from those on which the learned District Judge has based his judgment, that the execution application dated 20-12 1941, was within time, and I dismiss this appeal with costs.

Criminal Revn. Appln. No. 201 of 1946, Decided on 17-12-1946, from order of Addl. Sessions Judge, Nawabshah, D/-27-8-1946.

(a) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 476—Section has no reference to jurisdiction of Court in regard to proceedings with reference to which the offence is committed—Failure of Magistrate to act in accordance with S. 191, Criminal P. C., in regard to certain criminal proceedings does not vitiate complaint filed by him under S. 476, as to offence committed in relation to such proceedings.

There is no reference in S. 476, Criminal P. C., to jurisdiction over the proceedings in relation to which the offence is alleged to have been committed. A complaint filed by the Court under S. 476, against persons who have committed offences referred to in S. 195 (1) Cl. (b) or (c) in regard to certain proceedings in the Court cannot fail because such proceedings have ultimately been held to be without jurisdiction. The failure of a District Magistrate to act in accordance with S. 191, Criminal P. C., in certain proceedings has nothing to do with the complaint filed by him under S. 476 as to offences alleged to have been committed in relation to such proceedings. [Paras 8 and 9]

The question of sanction depends on the facts of each case. Where the allegation is that a police officer has instigated a person to file a false complaint of theft against an innocent person and upon such complaint being filed the police officer arrests and confines an innocent person, it cannot be said that he was acting or purporting to act in discharge of his duty and S. 270 of the Government of India Act has no application. Kishinchand H. Nagrani—for Applicant.

Fatechand Assudomal, Advocate-General of Sind—for the Crown.

Thadani J.—This is a Criminal Revision Application against the order of the learned Additional Sessions Judge of Nawabshah, who refused to withdraw a complaint filed against one Nandiram son of Fatechand by the learned District Magistrate of Nawabshah, under the provisions of S. 476, Criminal P. C., for offences under Ss. 120-B, 211, 193 and 220, Penal Code.

[2] The complaint was filed under the following circumstances:

[3] The applicant Nandiram was until recently a Sub-Inspector of Police at Sakrand. One Ghazi Khan was a head-constable posted at the same police station. There were two cases Nos. 4 and 6 of 1946, pending investigation by Nandiram. On 19-4-1946, Nandiram received information alleged to be from a spy that one Nathimal was in possession of property suspected to be stolen property. As two cases Nos. 4 and 6 were still undetected, Nandiram ordered one Allahbaksh, a head-constable, to search the house of Nathimal. Nathimal's house was searched, and the police took possession of 2 farasis, 2 gunjis, a coat, a patharni (quilt) and some other articles. In due course, the complainant in Crime No. 6 of 1946, one Rewomal, came at the police station but he did not identify any of the property secured from the house of Nathirmal. The complainant in Crime No. 4 was one Parsram, a student in the Sakrand Agricultural College. The officer-in-charge of the Sakrand Farm was directed by Nandiram to ask Parsram to appear at the police station.

[4] On 1-5-1946 it was not Parsram who appeared at the police station but one Saindito Chawan and reported that a theft of his property had taken place at Sakrand some two and half months previously and desired to see the articles which had been secured from the house of Nathirmal. It is alleged that in the presence of mashirs Ismailshah and Muhammad Chawan, Saindito Chawan identified 2 farasis, 2 gunjis, a coat and a quilt, part of the property secured from the house of Nathirmal as belonging to him. A first information report was duly lodged by Saindito. Nathirmal was arrested on 2-5-1946. A seven days' remand was applied for by Nandiram but the Second Class Magistrate authorized detention in police custody for four days only.

[5] After Nathirmal's arrest, one Narainibai appeared before the District Magistrate of Nawabshah and made an application in which she alleged high-handedness on the part of the applicant Nandiram and prayed for the release of Nathirmal on bail. On 4-5-1946, it is alleged, the District Magistrate, Nawabshah, went to the police station and directed Nandiram to stop all investigation on the first information report of the offence lodged by Saindito Chawan, and demanded that all papers connected with it be placed before him. It is the case of the applicant that after examining the papers, the District Magistrate asked the applicant to leave the room and proceeded to record the evidence of certain witnesses.

[6] Among the persons examined by the learned District Magistrate were Nathirmal, one Sanwaldas, Narainibai, Saindito, the first informant, the applicant, and the head constable, Ghazikhan. After recording their evidence, the learned District Magistrate directed Nathirmal to be released on bail, and on 11-5 1946 discharged Nathirmal under S. 253 (2), Criminal P. C., and directed an inquiry under S. 476, Criminal P. C., to be made by the Additional District Magistrate of Nawabshah. In due course, the Additional District Magistrate made his report to the District Magistrate who directed a complaint to be filed against the applicant and Gazikhan on 27-5-1946 before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Nawabshah, who took cognizance of it on 29-5-1946, and issued process against the applicant and Gazikhan. It is against this complaint that the revision application has been filed.

[7] It is contended as a matter of law that when a police investigation is pending in respect of a cognizable offence reported to the police, a District Magistrate has no jurisdiction to take cognizance of the offence alleged under S. 190 (1) (c), Criminal P. C.; that in any case the learned District Magistrate of Nawabshah committed an illegality in proceeding with the case against Nathirmal himself in disregard of the provisions of S. 191, Criminal P. C., which made it obligatory for him to inform Nathirmal that he had a right to be tried by another Magistrate, and that even though Nathirmal has been discharged by the learned District Magistrate, the proceedings held by him were without jurisdiction.

[8] In support of his contention, Mr. Nagrani has relied upon the case in A. I. R. 1938 Lah. 19.[1] That, however, was not a case where an accused person against whom proceedings were taken was discharged. While we appreciate the contention that where a person against whom an offence has been alleged and a Magistrate takes cognizance of the offence under S. 190 (1) (c) and is tried and convicted in disregard of the provisions of S. 191, Criminal P. C., the question of prejudice would necessarily arise, we cannot accept the position that where an accused person is discharged, prejudice still persists as a necessary consequence. But this aspect of the case, in our opinion, has nothing to do with the powers of a Magistrate to file a complaint in pursuance of S. 476, Criminal P. C., against persons who have, according to him, committed offences mentioned in S. 195 (1) (b) or (c), Criminal P. C. Assuming that the learned District Magistrate of Nawabshah acted without jurisdiction in the proceedings against Nathirmal, it would affect the case of Nathirmal only and would not affect the evidence of witnesses who were examined on oath in that case. Mr. Nagrani has not referred us to any authority for the proposition that where offences mentioned in S. 195 (1) (b) or (c), Criminal P. C., have been committed in proceedings in Court, and the proceedings against an accused person in the end have been held to be without jurisdiction, the proceedings taken against persons who have committed offences referred to in S. 195 (1) (b) or (c), Criminal P. C., are also vitiated. Section 476 (1), Criminal P. C., says:

"When any civil, revenue or criminal Court is, whether on application made to it in this behalf or otherwise, of opinion that it is expedient in the interests of justice that an inquiry should be made into any offence referred to in S. 195, sub-s. (1), cl. (b) or cl. (c), which appears to have been committed in or in relation to a proceeding in that Court, such Court may, after such preliminary inquiry, if any, as it thinks necessary, record a finding to that effect and make a complaint thereof in writing signed by the presiding officer of the Court, and shall forward the same to a Magistrate of the first class having jurisdiction, and may take sufficient security for the appearance of the accused before such Magistrate, or, if the alleged offence is non-bailable, may, if it thinks necessary so to do, send the accused in custody to such Magistrate and may bind over any person to appear and give evidence before such Magistrate."

It is to be remarked that S. 476 (1), Criminal P. C., does not say "when a civil, revenue or criminal Court having jurisdiction is . . ." There is no reference in S. 476, Criminal P. C., to jurisdiction, and we think for obvious reasons. The question of want of jurisdiction, for instance, may be decided by their Lordships of the Privy Council upon an application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council. Is it then to be supposed that all complaints filed against persons who have committed offences referred to in S. 195 (1), cl. (b) or (c) in the proceedings which have ultimately been held to be without jurisdiction so far as an accused person is concerned, must fail? We are not at present prepared to accept this view of the law.

[9] We are therefore of the opinion that the failure by the learned District Magistrate to act in accordance with S. 191, Criminal P. C., has nothing to do with the complaint filed by him under the provisions of S. 476, Criminal P. C. Nor on this view of the case do we think it necessary further to consider whether the learned District Magistrate exercised his powers under S. 190 (1) (b) or (c).

[10] Mr. Nagrani has questioned the right of the learned District Magistrate to delegate his powers to the learned Additional District Magistrate to hold an inquiry under the provisions of S. 476, Criminal P. C. But it is obvious that an inquiry under S. 476, Criminal P. C., is not obligatory. When the law does not require a Magistrate to hold an inquiry in the first instance, and a Magistrate wrongly orders an inquiry to be made by another Magistrate, and upon his report files a complaint, the report so made can be disregarded for the purposes of a revision application under S. 439, Criminal P. C., and no interference would be called for on the ground that the Magistrate making the complaint had no power to delegate his powers to order an inquiry to be made by another Magistrate.

[11] Mr. Nagrani then took the point that sanction was required under S. 270, Government of India Act, for an offence punishable under S. 220, Penal Code. But the question of sanction depends upon the facts of each case. Where as, here, the allegation is that a police officer has instigated a person to file a false complaint of theft against an innocent person and upon such complaint being filed, the police officer arrests and confines an innocent person, it cannot be said that he is acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his duty. On the facts as alleged, we do not think that S. 270, Government of India Act, has any application. We dismiss the revision application accordingly.

Civil Revn. Appln. No. 17 of 1947, Decided on 20-3-1947, from order of Sm. C. C., Chief Judge, Karachi D/- 13-2-1947.

(a) City of Karachi Municipal Act (17 (XVII) of 1933), S. 17— Karachi District Local Board if "ward" or "community" or "person" within S. 17.

The "ward concerned" in S. 17, means any of the eight wards mentioned at pp. 6 and 7, Karachi Manual of Election Rules. The Karachi District Local Board is not one of them. The word "community" in S. 17, means any of the communities mentioned at pp. 6 and 7, Karachi Manual of Election Rules, and refers to Hindus, Muhammadans, Europeans, Anglo Indians, Indian Christians, Parsis, Jews and Sikhs and not to a statutory body like the Karachi District Local Board. [Paras 9, 10]

The Karachi District Local Board is not a "ward" or "community" or "a person whose name is entered in the register of electors for the ward or community concerned" within the meaning of S. 17, and therefore the Judge of the Karachi Small Cause Court has no jurisdiction to entertain an application made by it under S. 17. [Para 14]

Even if the Karachi District Local Board were to be regarded as a "person" it is not a person "whose name is entered in the register of elections for the ward or community concerned" within S. 17. [Para 11]

(b) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 115—Persona designata —Orders of, if revisable—City of Karachi Municipal Act (17 of 1933), S. 17.

Where the Judge of the Karachi Small Cause Court as a persona designata under S. 17, City of Karachi Municipal Act, acts without jurisdiction he ceases to act as a persona designata and becomes a Court subordinate to the Chief Court under S. 115, Civil P. C. and the Chief Court has power to revise his order: 30 A I R 1913 Sind 233, Rel. on. [Para 17]

But the Chief Court will not interfere with the order when the error sought to be corrected has been rectified as the revisional powers will be exercised only in the interest of justice. 30 A. I. R. 1943 Sind 233, Rel. on. [Paras 20, 21]

The Karachi District Local Board elected one of its members K as a representative on the Karachi Municipal Corporation. K's term as a Municipal Councillor was to expire on 1st May 1946 but by reason of a fresh election to the Karachi District Local Board K was unseated and ceased to be a member of the Board from 1st September 1945 and ceased to be a councillor of the Municipal Corporation also from that date. The Local Board thereupon on 5th October 1945 elected V one of its members as its representative to the Municipal Corporation vice K.

Held that S. 15 was not exhaustive of the cases in which a Councillor ceased to hold office as such. When K ceased to be a member of the Local Board in 1945 he became incapable of acting as a Municipal Councillor within the meaning of S. 10 and the new councillor V could only function till the expiry of K's term on 1st May 1946. Thadani J.—This is a revision application under S. 115, Civil P. C., by one Vensimal Tarachand against an order of Mr. Rahimbakhsh, Chief Judge of the Karachi Small Cause Court, dated 13th February 1947 made in the following circumstances: In pursuance of S. 8, cl. (g), City of Karachi Municipal Act, 17 of 1933, the District Local Board, Karachi, by its resolution dated 16th April 1940 elected K. B. Allabakhsh Gabole as its representative on the Karachi Municipal Corporation for a term of five years from 1st May 1940. Under S. 9, City of Karachi Municipal Act, K. B. Gabole's term was to expire at noon on 1st May 1945, but by reason of Sind Act 10 of 1945, K. B. Gabole's term was extended till 1st May 1946. In August 1945, a fresh election to the District Local Board, Karachi, took place, and K. B. Gabole was unseated and ceased to be a member of the District Local Board with effect from 1st September 1945, and under R. 4 of Chap. 3 of Sch. 1, Karachi Municipal Corporation Manual of Election Rules K. B. Gabole ceased to be a Councillor of the Karachi Municipal Corporation also from 1st September 1945.

[2] On 5th October 1945, the Kharachi District Local Board passed a resolution by a majority of votes to the effect that the applicant Vensimal Tarachand was elected as a representative of the Karachi District Local Board to the Municipal Corporation vice K. B. Allahbakhsh Khan Gabole. The resolution was forwarded by the Karachi District Local Board to the Chief Officer of the Karachi Municipal Corporation and from 5th October 1945, the applicant represented the Karachi District Local Board as a Councillor on the Municipal Corporation.

[3] The term of the Councillors of the Karachi Municipal Corporation came to an end on 1st May 1946, and under the City of Karachi Municipal Act, the Chief Officer was required to hold fresh elections and he fixed certain dates for the elections as prescribed by Rules. All the Ward Elections were fixed for 13th March 1946, and the elections of the representatives of the Chamber of Commerce, the Karachi Indian Merchants' Association, the Karachi Buyers' and Shippers' Chamber, the Muslim Chamber of Commerce and the registered Trade Unions were fixed for dates between 26th March 1946 and 1st April 1946. Nothing was done as regards the Karachi District Local Board, because it appears that by its resolution dated 5th October 1945, the Karachi District Local Board had elected the applicant to represent it on the Municipal Corporation for a period of three years from 5th October 1945.

[4] After 29-4-1946 some correspondence took place between the Karachi District Local Board and the Karachi Municipal Corporation. Mr. Bukhari, the President of the Karachi District Local Board drew the attention of the Chief Officer of the Karachi Municipal Corporation to what he thought was an illegality committed by the Chief Officer in declaring the applicant as an elected representative of the District Local Board on the Karachi Municipal Corporation. The president of the District Local Board pointed out to the Chief Officer of the Karachi Municipal Corporation that having regard to S. 9, City of Karachi Municipal Act, the applicant ceased to be a Councillor on 1-5-1946 and that he should have retired along with other Councillors on that date, and that notwithstanding the resolution of the Karachi District Local Board passed on 5-10-1945, the applicant could not take his seat as a Councillor on the Karachi Municipal Corporation. The President of the Karachi District Local Board also informed the Chief Officer of the Karachi Municipal Corporation that the Karachi District Local Board will proceed to elect a fresh representative on the Karachi Municipal Corporation for the new term of the Corporation at their special meeting to be held on 7-5-1946. The Chief Officer of the Municipal Corporation, however, took his stand upon the resolution of the Karachi District Local Board dated 5-10-1945, and informed the President of the Karachi District Local Board that the applicant would continue to sit as a Councillor.

[5] On 7-5-1946, the Karachi District Local Board elected Pir Mahfoozshah as their representative on the Karachi Municipal Corporation and the Karachi District Local Board authorised the President to institute proceedings to have the election of the applicant set aside. In pursuance of this authority the Karachi District Local Board through its Chief Officer filed an application under S. 17, City of Karachi Municipal Act, 17 [XVII] of 1933.

[6] When the petition came up for hearing before the learned Chief Judge of the Karachi Small Cause Court, acting as persona designata under S. 17, City of Karachi Municipal Act, it was contended before him that the application filed by the Karachi District Local Board was incompetent as the Karachi District Local Board was not one of the persons whose name appeared in the register of electors for the ward or community concerned. The learned Judge, however, did not accept the contention and held that the application was competent.

"17. (1) If the order of the Chief Officer as to the validity of the nomination of any candidate for election as a councillor or as to the qualification of any person declared to be elected a councillor, is disputed, or if the validity of any election is questioned by reason of material irregularity in the election proceedings, bribery, corruption, personation, treating, undue influence or any other thing materially affecting the result of the election any person whose name is entered in the register of electors for the ward or the community concerned may, at any time within ten days after the result of the election has been declared, apply to the Judge of the Karachi Small Cause Court for an adjudication in the matter. If the application is for a declaration that any particular candidate shall be deemed to have been elected, the applicant shall make parties to his application all candidates who, although not declared elected were duly nominated for election to the seat in question and proceed against the candidate who has been declared to be elected."

[8] The learned Judge came to the conclusion that the application by the Karachi District Local Board was competent because it was a "community" within the meaning of S. 17, City of Karachi Municipal Act, notwithstanding the contention of the advocates who appeared before him that the word "community" in S. 17 refers to the communities mentioned in R. 3 of Chap. 1, Sch. 1 at pages 6 and 7 of the Karachi Municipal Corporation Manual of Election Rules. The learned Judge thought that there was no justification for putting such a restricted interpretation upon the word "community", for it was difficult to contemplate that the Legislature would fail to make a provision for challenging the election of the representative of the Karachi District Local Board to the Karachi Municipal Corporation. The learned Judge referred to the Oxford Dictionary for the meaning of the word "community", which described "community", as "A body of people organized into a political, municipal or social unity," and took the view that the word "community" must be understood in that sense, and that the District Local Board was therefore a community.

[9] We think the learned Judge was manifestly wrong in his interpretation of the word "community" in S. 17, City of Karachi Municipal Act. The word "community" in S. 17 refers to Hindus, Muhammadans, Europeans, Anglo Indians, Indian Christians, Parsis, Jews and Sikhs, and not to a statutory body like the Karachi District Local Board. For the purposes of elections to the Karachi Municipal Corporation, the City of Karachi is divided into a number of wards. The number of Hindu Councillors to be returned from ward I to the Municipal Corporation is 3; from ward II, 4; from ward III, 6; from ward IV, 6, from ward V, 3, from ward VI, 5; from ward VII, 2; from ward VIII, 1. The number of Muslim Councillors to be returned from ward I is 1; from ward II, 1; from ward III, 1; from ward IV, 2; from ward V, 12; from ward VI, 4; from ward VII, 2; from ward VIII, 2. Europeans, Anglo-Indians, Indian Christians, Parsis, Jews and Sikhs are not assigned any particular ward. They vote from all the wards together—Europeans returning 2; Anglo-Indians 1: Indian Christians 2; Parsis 3; Jews 1; and Sikhs 1. In column 1 at pages 6 and 7 of the Karachi Municipal Corporation Manual of Election Rules, Hindus, Muhammadans, Europeans, Anglo-Indians, Indian Christains, Parsis, Jews and Sikhs are described as a community. In cloumn 2 the wards are mentioned.

[10] We think the learned Judge gave undue importance to the word "or" between the words "ward" and "community" in S. 17, City of Karachi Municipal Act. The important words in S. 17 are : ". . , ... any person whose name is entered in the registers of electors for the ward or the community concerned . . . . . ." The "ward concerned" means one of the eight wards mentioned at pages 6 and 7 of the Manual of Election Rules, and the "community concerned" means any of the communities mentioned at pages 6 and 7 of the same Manual. The learned Judge fell into error in thinking that the Karachi District Local Board was a community within the meaning of S. 17, City of Karachi Municipal Act. The meaning of the word "community" in S. 17 must be gathered from the Act itself having regard to its purpose and scheme, and the learned Judge should not have adopted the meaning of the word community in the English Dictionary, with the object of giving effect to his doubts or apprehensions of his conception of hardship in which an aggrieved party might find himself.

[11] Under S. 17, City of Karachi Municipal Act any person whose name is entered in the register of electors for the ward or the community concerned may apply to the Judge of the Small Cause Court, Karachi, and it is conceded that even if a District Local Board were to be regarded as a person, the name of the Karachi District Local Board is not entered in the registers of electors for any of the wards I to VIII, or in the register of electors for any of the communities mentioned at pp. 6 and 7 of the Karachi Municipal Corporation Manual of Election Rules. We think the learned Judge, then, clearly assumed jurisdiction which he did not possess.

[12] Not only has the learned Judge assumed jurisdiction which he did not possess, but he has dealt with the arguments of the advocates who appeared on behalf of the applicant and the Karachi Municipal Corporation and criticised the conduct of the Chief Officer of the Karachi Municipal Corporation in a manner unbecoming even a persona designata.

[13] Commenting on the correspondence passed between the Chief Officer of the Karachi Municipal Corporation and the President of the District Local Board, Karachi, the learned Judge says :

"The perusal of this letter shows beyond any doubt the reckless disregard on the part of the executive head of the Corporation for the provisions of the Act and the rules framed thereunder."

The learned Judge should have remembered that the Municipal Corporation has its Legal Adviser, and it appears that the Chief Officer was acting upon the advice of the Legal Adviser of the Corporation. There was, therefore, no justification for the learned Judge to express himself in the way in which he has done. It is sufficient for us to observe that the learned Judge's adverse remarks concerning the Chief Officer of the Karachi Municipal Corporation are uncalled for and without justification.

[14] We have no doubt that the learned Judge was not justified in entertaining an application at the instance of the Karachi District Local Board, it being neither a ward nor a community nor a person whose name is entered in the register of electors for the ward or the community concerned. But this erroneous assumption of jurisdiction by the learned Judge does not dispose of the question as to whether we should exercise our extraordinary jurisdiction in revision on the facts of this case.

[15] Mr. Dingomal for the Karachi District Local Board has put his case for consideration from two points of view (1) that this Court has no power to revise any order of a persona designata, and (2) that, in any case, as the learned Judge has rectified an error which should not have been allowed to remain, we should decline to exercise our powers in revision. Mr. Dingomal has relied upon a number of decisions of the Bombay High Court in 35 Bom. L. R. 89,[1] 21 Bom. 279[2] and 28 Bom L. R. 519,[3] where the view taken was that a Judge acting under S. 15, Bombay City Municipalities Act (18 [XVIII] of 1925) was not a Court but a persona designata, and the High Court had, therefore, no jurisdiction to revise his order under S. 115, Civil P. C., 1908.

[16] In a later decision, however, of the Bombay High Court in 46 Bom. L. R. 371,[4] Macklin J., did not think that where a persona designata exceeded his jurisdiction, the High Court in revision was powerless to interfere. It is true, Chagla J., in 47 Bom. L. R. 851,[5] did not agree with the view of Macklin J., and preferred to follow the earlier decisions of the Bombay High Court to which we have referred.

[17] It is unnecessary to agree or disagree with the earlier decisions of the Bombay High Court or the view of Chagla J. We are bound by the decision of a Division Bench of this Court in I. L. R. (1943) Kar 345,[6] in which the view taken was that if a Judge as a persona designata exceeded the powers conferred on him by the section or acted outside it, he ceased to act as a persona designata, and became a Court subordinate to the High Court under S. 115, Civil P. C.

[18] A Full Bench of the Madras High Court in 47 Mad. 369,[7] have even taken a less restricted view. The learned Judges took the view that a District or Subordinate Judge, in deciding an election petition presented before him under the rules issued by the local Government under the Local Boards Act, 1920, was acting not merely as a persona designata but as a Court in the exercise of its ordinary jurisdiction extended for that purpose; consequently, the High Court was competent to exercise its powers of revision over decisions in election petitions.

[19] We do not think it is necessary to refer at length to other decisions of other High Courts, for instance, those reported in 11 Rang. 337,[8] A. I. R. 1944 Pat. 147,[9] 20 Pat. 373,[10] or to the decision reported in (1910) 2 K. B. 165,[11] remarks at pages 178 and 179, in view of the decision of this Court to which we have referred, and from which we are not inclined, for the present, at any rate, to differ.

[20] But while we think we have power under S. 115, Civil P. C., to revise an order passed by a Judge as a persona designata who acts without jurisdiction, we do not propose to interfere in the order passed by the learned Chief Judge of the Karachi Small Cause Court because we think a serious error which had been committed in permitting the applicant to continue as a Councillor on the Karachi Municipal Corporation after 1st May 1946 has now been rectified properly.

[21] Mr. Khanchand for the applicant has argued that S. 9, City of Karachi Municipal Act, has no application to the election of the applicant by the Karachi District Local Board, because, according to Mr. Khanchand, the vacancy created by the unseating of K. B. Gabole at an election of the Karachi District Local Board held in 1945 was not a casual vacancy within the meaning of S. 10, Municipal Act, so as to retire the applicant from the Municipal Corporation on 1st May 1946. In support of this argument, he has referred us to Ss. 14 and 15, Municipal Act, which deal with questions of disqualification and ceasing to hold office as a Councillor. Mr. Khanchand contends that it is not disputed that K. B. Gabole was never disqualified; he merely ceased to hold office within the meaning of S. 15 which lays down in what cases a Councillor will cease to hold office as such. But we do not think that S. 15 is exhaustive. Section 10 refers to non-acceptance of office by a person elected to be a Councillor, death, resignation, disqualification of a Councillor or his becoming incapable of acting previous to the expiry of his term of office. Where a Councillor becomes incapable of acting before the expiry of his term, the new Councillor acting in his place must retire in accordance with S. 9. Obviously, K. B. Gabole was incapable of acting as a Councillor after he ceased to be a member of the Karachi District Local Board in 1945, and when the applicant was elected to represent the Karachi District Local Board on the Corporation on account of the incapacity of K. B. Gabole to act as a Councillor, by reason of his ceasing to be a member of the Karachi District Local Board, the applicant could only function till 1st May 1946. The Division Bench of this Court in I.L.R. (1943) Kar. 345,[6] has dealt with this aspect of the case in different circumstances where the persona designata had acted without jurisdiction, but had passed an order which the interests of justice required should be upheld. The Division Bench declined to interfere on the ground that the revisional powers of a High Court have to be exercised only in the interests of justice. We think the interests of justice in the case before us do not require our interference in this case, because a manifest error has now been rectified. We therefore dismiss the revision application but make no order as to costs.

Tayaballi Abdulhussain Mandviwala — Applicant v. The Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay, Sind and Baluchistan, Bombay — Respondent.

Referred Case No. 98 of 1944, Decided on 10-2-1948.

(a) Income-tax Act (1922), S. 16 (1) (c), Proviso 1 —Trust—Provision for forfeiture of benefit under certain circumstances — Right reserved to settlor to cancel forfeiture — This does not amount to reservation of right to re-assume power over property — Proviso not applicable — Trust not revocable.

A trust deed provided that "if any of the beneficiaries during the continuance of this trust is adjudicated an insolvent he shall forfeit all interest in all the trust moneys, properties etc. and thereafter the entire trust property shall vest and be paid out to the other beneficiary or beneficiaries. Likewise, if the share or interest of any beneficiary in trust properties is attached and such attachment continues effective for a period of one month and be not removed or raised during one month then the right or interest of such beneficiary in all trust properties, shall stand forfeited and the share forfeited shall immediately vest in the other beneficiary or beneficiaries : Provided however that it shall be within my power and at my discretion as trustee during my lifetime to cancel forfeiture occasioned by attachment or by other process of Court and to declare such beneficiary eligible and entitled to his share under this trust deed in everything of the trust by a separate declaration deed made in writing and executed by me :"

Held, without deciding whether the clause was legal or illegal, that the trust was not a revocable settlement within the meaning of the first proviso to S. 16 (1) (c), Income-tax Act, so as to regard the income therefrom as the income of the settlor. The clause in the trust deed entitling the settlor to cancel the forfeiture under certain circumstances did not amount to a reservation of a right to re-assume power over the assets. [Para 10]

(b) Income-tax Act (1922), S. 66 (1)—New plea.

Point not taken before the Income tax authorities or the tribunal and not arising out of the reference and not falling under S. 66 (1) cannot be allowed to be raised during the hearing of the reference. [Para 10]

Fatechand—for Applicant.

Hakumatrai Eidnani—for Respondent.

Tyabji C. J. — This is a reference under S. 66 (1), Income-tax Act, made by the Income-tax Appellate Tribunal, and the main point in the case is, whether a trust deed executed on 24th March 1934 was a revocable settlement within the meaning of proviso 1 of S. 16 (1) (c), Income-tax (Amendment) Act, 1939.

[2] This deed, Ex. T-G, was executed by Tayabali A. Mandviwalla, who purported thereby to create a trust of certain properties for the benefit of his son, Ghulamali, and his grandsons, Yusuf Ali and Hakimuddin. The settlor, Tayabali, constituted himself as a trustee for the three beneficiaries from the date of the deed, and it was provided in the deed that thereafter the properties subject to the trust were to be managed by the trustee in a particular manner during the duration of the trust, and that the trust was to come to a termination on the death of the settlor or when the youngest of the beneficiaries attained majority, whichever event happened later. Clause 13 of the deed was as follows :

"That if any of the beneficiaries during the continuance of this Trust is adjudicated an insolvent he shall forfeit all interest in all the Trust moneys, properties, securities, fund, etc., and thereafter the entire trust property and everything appertaining and relating to Trust shall vest and be paid out to the other beneficiary or beneficiaries. Likewise if the share or interest of any beneficiary during the continuance of this trust in trust properties or any other trust moneys or funds or securities or other properties is attached or any process of Court taken out by any person by execution proceedings or otherwise for satisfaction of his claim or payment of money demand against such beneficiary and such attachment or process continues effective for a period of one month and be not removed or raised during one month then the right or interest of such beneficiary under this Trust in all Trust properties, funds, moneys, securities or other properties, etc, shall stand forfeited and the share so forfeited shall immediately vest in the other beneficiary or beneficiaries : Provided however that it shall be within my power and at my discretion as Trustee during my lifetime to cancel forfeiture occasioned by attachment or by other process of Court and to declare such beneficiary eligible and entitled to his share under this Trust Deed in everything of the Trust by a separate Declaration Deed made in writing and executed by me."

[3] There was no dispute before this matter came up to this Court about the deed executed by Tayabali being a valid deed effecting a gift by way of a trust in favour of the three beneficiaries. It was contended on behalf of Tayabali that the income of the properties, which were the subject of this trust, had ceased to be his properties and should not be included as his properties in the assessments made for the years 1939-40 to 1942-43. The Tribunal ultimately decided against the assessee on this matter and para. 6 of the judgment of the Tribunal which deals with this matter is as follows :

"6. There is, however, one clause in the second trust deed dated 24th March 1934, that makes all the difference between the two and goes to support the department's view that that settlement is revocable. The Appellate Assistant Commissioner appears to have lost sight of this clause and it was brought to our notice by the Departmental Representative who based his case mainly upon it. That clause is to the effect that the beneficiary under the deed shall forfeit all interest in the trust properties and income on his being adjudicated an insolvent, and shall likewise do so if the trust property or income happens to be attached in execution of a decree against him. In such a case the deed directs that the interest so forfeited shall vest in the rest of the beneficiaries. The deed further provides that it shall be within the power of the appellant settlor to cancel the forfeiture, and declare by a deed that such a beneficiary shall continue to be entitled to the share. It is this particular provision on which the Departmental Representative has relied. Now, the clause read as a whole will go to show that the forfeiture comes into force immediately on the insolvency of the beneficiary, or on the attachment of the property in execution of a decree if the attachment is not raised within one month. In such a case the interest immediately vests in the remaining beneficiaries. But if a settlor has power to make a restitution to the beneficiary who has thus lost his interest by means of a deed made for the purpose it means that he has equally a power to make such a disposition which he cannot do unless he has reassumed control over the assets, This particular provision therefore brings the settlement of 24-3 1934, within the ambit of a revocable settlement, under S. 16 (1) (c), Income-tax Act."

[4] At the instance of the assessee, the Tribunal has made a reference to this Court under S. 66 (1) and the question referred is as follows:

"Whether, in the circumstances of the case and upon a true construction of cl. 13 of the deed of trust dated 24-3-1934, it was rightly held that the trust in question was a revocable settlement within the meaning of proviso 1 to S. 16 (1) (c), Income-tax (Amendment) Act, 1939, so as to regard the income therefrom as the income of the assessee?"

[5] The text of cl. (c) of S. 16 (1), Income-tax Act, is as follows :

"All income arising to any person by virtue of a settlement or disposition whether revocable or not, and whether effected before or after the commencement of the Indian Income-tax (Amendment) Act, 1939, from assets remaining the property of the settlor or disponer shall be deemed to be income of the settlor or disponer, and all income arising to any person by virtue of a revocable transfer of assets shall be deemed to be income of the transferor:"

Then follow the three provisos. There is no question that with regard to the properties which were the subject of the trust, all the assets had ceased to be the properties of the settlor under the terms of the deed, and the only question in this case was, whether the transfer of the assets, effected by the settlement was or was not a revocable transfer.

[6] Proviso 1 to cl. (c) of S. 16 (1) is in these terms:

"Provided that for the purposes of this clause a settlement, disposition or transfer shall be deemed to be revocable if it contains any provision for the retransfer directly or indirectly of the income or assets to the settlor, disponer or transferor, or in any way gives the settlor, disponer or transferor a right to re-assume power directly or indirectly over the income or assets."

[7] The question before us, therefore, is whether cl. 13 of the deed contains a proviso "for the re-transfer directly or indirectly of the income or assets to the settlor" or, any provision which in any way gave to the settlor "a right to reassume power directly or indirectly over the income or the assets."

[8] The decision of the Tribunal has been set out above. The point relied upon by the Tribunal was, that under cl. 13 under certain circumstances, a beneficiary was to forfeit his rights under the deed, but the settlor had reserved to himself a power to cancel the forfeiture, if he so chose. The Tribunal argued:

"But if a settlor has power to make a restitution to the beneficiary who has thus lost his interest by means of a deed made for the purpose it means that he has equally a power to make such a disposition which he cannot do unless he has reassumed control over the assets."

[9] We find it quite impossible to accept this argument. As cl. 13 is worded, the effect of it would be that under certain contingencies the beneficiary was to lose his interest under the settlement, and that interest was thereupon immediately to vest in the other beneficiary or beneficiaries. It is argued before us on behalf of the assessee that such a clause was illegal and of no effect, as the interests of the beneficiaries vested in the beneficiaries from the moment when the deed was executed, under the terms of the deed, and any such clause, by which the beneficiaries, after their beneficial interests had vested in them, were to be deprived of the benefits which had accrued to them after their beneficial interests had vested in them, was inoperative in law. Mr. Fatehchand cited (1883) 21 Ch. D. 838[1] and (1888) 38 Ch. D. 176,[2] in support of his argument. Section 10 (12?), T. P. Act was also referred to. Mr. Hakumatrai, on the other hand, argued that the terms of the deed were such that the entire deed was invalid according to the Mahomedan law, as he argued, under the terms of the deed the beneficiaries were not to receive any benefit at all until the youngest of the beneficiaries had attained majority. Mr. Hakumatrai contended that the deed created a trust under which the beneficial interests of the beneficiaries were only to vest at a future date, after certain events had taken place.

[10] We do not think that we can allow Mr. Hakumatrai to argue that the deed in question was an invalid one because it is clear that no such point was taken before the Income-tax authorities or the Tribunal, and the matter does not arise out of the reference before us and does not fall within the perview of S. 66 (1). We also consider it unnecessary to discuss the point, whether these clauses were or were not illegal. It is sufficient to say that, no matter what view one takes with regard to the legality or effect of the clauses in question, it is impossible to say that cl. 13 of the deed contains any provision the effect of which was to reserve to the settlor a right to reassume power over the assets at any time. It appears to us therefore that the question referred must be answered in the negative, that is to say, the settlement in question was not revocable within the meaning of proviso 1 to S 16 (1) (c), Income-tax Act. We answer this reference accordingly, and we order that the assessee have the costs of this application.

Confirmation Case No. 37 and Criminal Appeal No. 197 of 1947, Decided on 3-2-1948.

(a) Evidence Act (1872), S. 33—Proviso—"Adverse party" is party which does not call the witness – Party calling him does not become "adverse" merely because witness favours the other side or becomes hostile.

The expression "the adverse party" is used in S. 33 to distinguish that party from "the party who calls" the witness, and the distinction has nothing whatever to do with the nature of the evidence given by the witness. A party calling a witness does not become "the adverse party" because the witness gives evidence which favours the opposite party or is hostile to the party calling the witness; and the expression "the adverse party" in the proviso can only refer to the party which was the adverse party at the time when the deposition was recorded in the first proceedings. In order to entitle the accused to get the conviction set aside on the ground of illegal rejection of evidence, the accused has to show that the admission of the evidence would have varied the decision of the Court. Where the case against the accused is clear and the admission of the rejected evidence would not have varied the decision, the conviction cannot be set aside on the ground of such rejection. E. V. Castellino—for Appellant.

Fatechand Assudomal, Advocate-General—for the Crown.

Tyabji C. J.—The appellant, Makhan Khan son of Nawazali, has been convicted of murder by a Judge of this Court, Agha J., in accordance with a unanimous verdict by the jury and sentenced to death. He has appealed, and the case is also before us for confirmation of the death sentence.

[2] The appellant has been convicted of the murder of one Bashir Ahmed. On the night of 27th November 1946, at about 10 p. m, the deceased, Bashir Ahmed, was going on a much frequented public street, the Lidbitter Road The appellant came from the opposite direction and stabbed the deceased. One Sahibdino, a tailor, who was following the deceased, was about ten paces behind him, when he saw the appellant coming from the opposite direction and stabbing the deceased. He was one of several persons there, who thereafter ran in pursuit of the appellant, who ran to and sat in a gharry which happened to be standing a short distance away. The gharry was immediately surrounded by people and a police constable, Mukhtiar Singh, who was on duty at the time and saw the appellant with a knife in hand pursued by several men, immediately came up and arrested the appellant, and secured the knife which was blood-stained. The appellant was then taken to the spot where Bashir Ahmed had fallen down, and the injured man immediately stated that it was appellant who had stabbed him. Another police constable, Ghulam Rasool, who though not on duty happened to be there, also saw the entire occurrence. Tirath, son of Sugnomal was the owner of a pan-biri shop which was near the scene of the crime. His attention was attracted by the cries on the street, and on turning to that direction he saw the injured man lying on the ground, and the appellant running from there to the gharry where he was arrested. There were also other persons there, including one Daulatkhan, who saw the occurrence and came up and told the police constable that it was the appellant who had stabbed the deceased.

[3] The deceased was immediately sent off to the hospital and the appellant and the witnesses were taken to the Police Station. Head Constable Mukhtiar Singh made a report at the Police Station within a few minutes of the occurrence in the course of which he stated:

"I was on duty at Napier Road from 8 p. m. to 2 a. m. At about 10 p. m. when I came to the junction of Napier Road and Lidbitter Road, I saw the present accused with an open knife in his hand running towards a garri standing nearby. I heard cries of "khoon, khoon". I caught hold of the accused who gave his name as Makhan Khan and also secured the open knife which was in his hand. It was stained with blood

Doulatkhan, Abu Yakoob and others came and told me that the present accused had stabbed one Bashir Ahmed, a Punjabi young boy who was lying in the pool of blood. I took the accused to the injured who stated and pointed that the accused Makhankhan had stabbed him due to previous enmity.

In the meantime H. C. Karim and H C. Rahmatkhan came there. The injured was then sent to Civil Hospital with H. C. Karim, and I have brought the accused Makhan Khan and produced the blood stained knife taken possession of from the accused.

There are blood marks on his coat and right hand palm of the accused."

[4] It has already been mentioned that the deceased told Head Constable Mukhtiar Sing and the others who came up, when the appellant was taken to the place where the deceased was lying, that the appellant had stabbed him. A statement of the deceased was recorded by Sub-Inspector Muhammad Sharif at the Civil Hospital on the same night, and another statement of the deceased was recorded by the Additional City Magistrate, Mr. Mir Muhammad, the next morning. In both these statements the deceased stated very clearly that the appellant had stabbed him because of enmity on account of certain quarrels which had taken place between the deceased and the appellant. The blood stained knife, which was secured from the hands of the appellant, and the coat which the appellant was wearing at the time of the incident which appeared to be blood-stained, were sent to the Chemical Analyser, who found human blood on both articles.

[5] The medical evidence shows that the deceased had an incised wound $2\frac{1}{2}'' \times 1''$, deep to the abdominal cavity, as a result of which the omentum and colon protruded from the left side of the abdomen. The deceased died as a result of this injury on 29th November at 4.30 P. M. There was no question in the case about the death of the deceased having been caused by this stab-wound.

[6] The appellant did not make any statement before the Committing Magistrate beyond saying that he would say what he had to say in the Sessions Court. In the Sessions Court he stated:

"Mukhtiarsing secured me at 10-30 P. M. where the quarrel had taken place. He said I had committed this murder. The injured Md. Bashir was my neighbour. I lived in the compound and he lived outside it in the land. There was no dispute between me and him. I did not stab him."

He denied that the knife and the coat secured by the police belonged to him.

[7] This was a case tried by a Jury who unanimously found the appellant guilty. There is no suggestion made by the learned [illegible] who appears before us on behalf of the appellant, that there was any misdirection in the learned Judge's charge to the Jury. There cannot be any question about the evidence in the case abundantly supporting the charge against the appellant. There was only one point which Mr. Castellino, the learned advocate for the appellant, pressed before us. He argued that the learned Judge had erroneously disallowed an application made on behalf of the defence for bringing on the record, under S. 33, Evidence Act, the evidence given by Doulatkhan a witness examined in the Court of the Committing Magistrate who could not be examined in the Sessions Court as he was untraceable and whose whereabouts were not known. It was argued that the appellant was gravely prejudiced as a result of this error, and the conviction of the appellant ought not, therefore, to be upheld.

[8] Now, Doulatkhan, who had been examined on behalf of the Crown before the Committing Magistrate, had stated in his evidence as follows:

"I know Bashir since $2\frac{1}{2}$ years. He was working with me at Malir. About 3 months back at 9 10 P M, I was going along the Napier Road, Bashir was going ahead of me. When I came to the corner Bashir said that he was stabbed. I did not know the accused. I saw him only when he was pulled down from the ghariy by Mukhtiar Sing He had a knife in his hand. I did not see the accused stabbing Bashir. Some people were saying that a Makrani had stabbed him; but I did not see him being stabbed. Bashir fell down on the footpath. Accused was brought to the scene by Mukhtiar Sing. Bashir at that time could not speak. The accused was then taken to foujdari. We took Bashir to the hospital. Bashir said nothing about the cause of fight. After leaving Bashir in the hospital I went to call his father. Some police constables came there besides Mukhtiar Sing."

[9] After proving through the evidence of the Sub-Inspector investigating the case, that the whereabouts of Doulatkhan were not known and that he was untraceable, the Assistant Public Prosecutor stated in the Sessions Court that he did not wish to bring the evidence of the witness on the record under S. 33, Evidence Act. Mr. Chandnani the advocate who appeared on behalf of the appellant, then made an application that the evidence of Doulatkhan be brought on the record "either as a prosecution witness or as a defence witness" The Assistant Public Prosecutor, however, objected to this, on the ground that he regarded Doulatkhan as a hostile witness:—" as a witness who had not spoken the truth," and argued that as he had not had the right and opportunity to cross-examine the witness as a hostile witness, the evidence could not be admitted. The learned Judge in his order upheld the objection. He also stated in the order that he had considered the question of taking the evidence on record as that of a court witness, but was of the opinion that this could not be done unless both the Crown and the accused had had the right and opportunity to cross-examine the witness.

[10] We are clearly of the view that the order made by the learned Judge was not correct. The terms of S. 33, Evidence Act are very clear with regard to the question now before us. The relevant words in the section are:

"Provided . . . . , that the adverse party in the first proceedings had the right and opportunity to cross-examine."

This is one of the conditions which have to be fulfilled before the evidence given by a witness in a judicial proceeding can become relevant and be admitted in the subsequent proceeding. "The first proceeding" in this case was the enquiry before the committing Magistrate. As Doulatkhan was examined as a prosecution witness, the adverse party in the proceeding clearly was the appellant. Apart from the fact that there is nothing in the recorded deposition to show that the evidence of Doulatkhan was regarded as hostile evidence in the Magistrate's Court, a reference to Ss. 137, 138 and 154, Evidence Act, will make it clear that the expression "the adverse party" is used to distinguish that party from "the party who calls" the witness, and the distinction has nothing whatever to do with the nature of the evidence given by the witness. A party calling a witness does not become "the adverse party" because the witness gives evidence which favours the adverse party or is hostile to the party calling the witness, and the expression "the adverse party" in the proviso can only refer to the party which was the adverse party at the time when the deposition was recorded in the first proceeding. There can be no doubt that the appellant had the right to cross-examine the witness, a question depending upon the legal character of the first proceeding. There is also no question about the appellant having in fact had the opportunity to cross-examine the witness, a matter of recorded fact. The conditions required by this proviso were thus completely fulfilled, and the recorded evidence of Doulatkhan became relevant for proving the truth of the facts stated therein, by reason of the terms of S. 33, as there was no question here about the other conditions required by the section having been fulfilled. It was therefore open to the prosecution or the defence or the Court to bring this relevant evidence on the record. We, therefore, think that the evidence of Doulatkhan ought, under the circumstances to have been brought on the record under S. 33, by the prosecution as Doulatkhan had been examined as a prosecution witness in the Magistrate's Court. The defence and the Court were also entitled, if they so chose, to have the evidence brought on the record like any other relevant evidence.

[11] We have, therefore, to see whether the erroneous rejection of this evidence by the learned Judge furnishes any ground for ordering a new trial or reversing the conviction. In view of the terms of S. 167, Evidence Act, it is necessary for Mr. Castellino to show us that the rejection of this evidence was likely to affect the decision of the case. If we are satisfied that even if the evidence had been admitted, it ought not to have varied the decision of the Court, the rejection cannot be made a ground for interfering with the decision.

[12] The deposition of Doulatkhan has been set out above. We cannot see how the admission of this evidence could have helped the appellant. It is, on the other hand, clear that this evidence even as it stands largely, if not entirely, supports the rest of the prosecution evidence. It would appear that the only criticism which the prosecution had to offer regarding this evidence was that Doulatkhan had not spoken the truth when he denied having actually seen the appellant stabbing the deceased, and heard the deceased implicating the appellant. We consider it to be beyond any question that even if the rejected evidence had been received, it ought not to have led the Court to arrive at a different decision.

[13] This is a very clear case, and there is no reason for interfering either with the conviction or the sentence passed. We accordingly dismiss this appeal and confirm the sentence of death passed on the appellant.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 20, R. 12—Appeal—Order holding application under O. 20, R. 12 incompetent in view of appellate decree directing mesne profits to be ascertained in execution — Order not appealable — Civil P. C. (1908), Ss. 2 (2) and 105.

An order under O. 20, R. 12 is not now appealable. Where an enquiry is directed to ascertain mesne profits, a final decree has to be passed and the appeal lies against such a decree. [Para 4]

Where the appellate Court while decreeing a suit for possession directed the mesne profits to be ascertained in execution proceedings:

Held, that the order of the lower Court that no application under O. 20, R. 12 lay in view of the direction of the appellate Court was not a decree within the meaning of S. 2 (2) but was an interlocutory order and no appeal lay from it. [Para 5]

A Court has inherent power to set aside its own order which is null and void. In such a case the Court does not substitute one decision on the merits for another but merely finds and records that what had been done was without jurisdiction. No Court is compelled to proceed with any proceeding after finding that the proceeding was without jurisdiction and the fact that many steps had been taken in the proceeding before the Court found that it had no jurisdiction, is no ground for persisting in continuing the proceeding : 32 S. Tikamdas Bassarmal — for Appellants.

Fatehchand Assudomal — for Respondents.

Meher J.—The facts out of which this appeal arises are as follows: The plaintiff appellant filed this suit for possession of a certain land in Deh New Sukkur against the Secretary of State for India defendant 1 and K. B. Pirbakhsh defendant 2. The District Court which tried the suit dismissed it. In appeal the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Sind decreed the suit for possession, on 18-1-1931, and as regards mesne profits, ordered :

"We order that the compensation payable to defendant 2 for improvements to be ascertained as on this date, and also the mesne profits payable to the plaintiff from the date of dispossession to the date on which he is put into possession, both being ascertained in the manner stated above, be determined in execution proceedings."

An appeal was made to the Privy Council which was dismissed. As regards mesne profits, their Lordships of the Privy Council observed in the judgment :

"As regards the compensation payable to the defendant for improvements, and as regards the mesne profits payable to the plaintiff, no objection was stated before their Lordships to the manner in which these matters are dealt with in the judgment of the Judicial Commissioner's Court, which will accordingly stand."

[2] Instead of acting in accordance with the very clear and definite directions given in the order, and making an application for determination of mesne profits in execution, the appellant made an application under O. 20, R. 12, Civil P. C, in the course of which it was stated :

"Though the Appellate Court while making an order to the above effect in the judgment has made a mention that the mesne profits may be determined in execution proceedings, but under the law such enquiries are not to be made in execution proceedings, but an application is to be made in the suit. Hence this application is being presented."

[3] The learned Sub-Judge, Mr. Shankersing, granted this application and appointed a Commissioner to determine mesne profits. After the Commissioner had made his report, the matter came up, on 9-2-1942, before Mr. Shankersing's successor, Mr. Bhavnani. After considering the decision in 42 C. W. N. 748,[1] Mr. Bhavnani came to the conclusion that the direction that mesne profits should be determined in execution proceedings was binding upon the Court, and that the application under O. 20, R. 12, Civil P. C, was therefore one which the Court had no jurisdiction to entertain. He found the order previously passed by Mr. Shankersing to be without jurisdiction, set it aside, and dismissed the application under O. 20, R. 12, Civil P. C. It is against this order that the appellant has come in appeal.

[4] A preliminary objection has been urged by Mr. Fatehchand for the respondent that no appeal lies against this order. Under the Code of 1882, the amount of mesne profits was determined in execution proceedings, and the decision determining mesne profits was appealable as a decree. An order under O. 20, R. 12, Civil P. C., is not now appealable. Where an enquiry is directed to ascertain mesne profits, a final decree has to be passed, and the appeal lies against such a decree. A party aggrieved by the determination of mesne profits can prefer an appeal from any decree finally determining the mesne profits.

[5] In this case, however, there was a decree, passed on appeal by the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Sind, for the determination of mesne profits in the manner directed. The order passed by the lower Court, refusing to act in a manner not permitted by the decree and insisting upon the directions in the decree being carried out, could not be construed as an order finally determining mesne profits. The order that no application lay under O. 20, R. 12, Civil P. C., because the direction in the decree passed by the Appellate Court, that mesne profits be determined in execution proceedings, had to be followed, was not a decree within the meaning of S. 2 (2), Civil P. C. It was only an interlocutory order. The order did not preclude the appellant from obtaining an order for the determination of mesne profits in accordance with the decree passed. It would therefore appear that no appeal lies from the order.

[6] As, however, the merits of the order have been argued at some length, we propose to make a few remarks on the matter.

[7] The points taken by Mr. Tikamdas are (1) that the Sub-Judge erred in setting aside his predecessor's order, and (2) that the direction in the decree with regard to mesne profits was void

[8] As regards the first point, it has been pointed out in Mulla's Code of Civil Procedure, Edn. 11, at p. 480, that a Court can recall and cancel its own invalid orders under its inherent powers. There is also a Sind case reported in 32 S. L. R. 215,[2] in which it was held that a Court has inherent power to set aside its own order which is null and void. In such a case the Court does not substitute one decision on the merits for another, but merely finds and records that what had been done was without jurisdiction. No Court is compelled to proceed with any proceeding after finding that the proceeding was without jurisdiction, and the fact that many steps had been taken in the proceeding, before the Court found that it had no jurisdiction, is no ground for persisting in continuing the proceeding.

[9] We now come to the next point. Mr. Tikamdas has argued that the direction of the Appellate Court, that mesne profits be determined in execution proceedings, was not permissible under the Civil Procedure Code, and was invalid. We are unable to accept this argument. We might refer to the case in 42 C. W. N. 748,[1] where there was a decree directing that mesne profits be determined in execution proceedings; it was held that the direction was not invalid, and that the executing Court should in such a case make a report to the Court which passed the decree, which would then pass final decree under O. 20, R. 12, Civil P. C. In that case, Derbyshire C. J., observed :

"There is nothing in O. 20, R. 12. Civil P. C., forbidding the suit Court which passed its first decree to direct that the inquiry in respect of the mesne profits from the institution of the suit to recovery of possession shall be ascertained by the executing Court. It is probable that where the executing Court has to come into existence, to obtain possession, that Court is in a position to know better than any other tribunal, the date at which the possession was obtained, and so it is in a position to ascertain the amount payable in respect of mesne profits from the institution of suit to delivery of possession. It appears to me that there is nothing improper or wrong in law in the suit Court directing that such an inquiry shall be made by the executing Court, and there is much to be said in favour of it from the point of view of convenience. When the executing Court has ascertained the amount of the mesne profits, it is not for that executing Court to make a decree in respect of them, but it is for the executing Court to report the amount of the mesne profits that it has so assessed, to the suit Court, and then it is for the suit Court to pass that in the words of sub s. (2) of O. 20 R. 12, 'a final decree in respect of rent or mesne profits in accordance with the result of such inquiry.' This final decree can then be transmitted to the executing Court for execution. I see no ground whatever for the view taken by the learned Judge that directing the enquiry as to mesne profits from the institution of suit to delivery of possession, to be made in execution, makes the decree invalid. It may be that in accordance with custom that has sprung up, based upon opinion expressed with regard to the effect of the change brought about by O. 20, R. 12, it has been, and is, unusual to direct the inquiry to be made in execution. It may well be that the Courts will avoid this direction; but where, as in this case, such a direction does appear, I am unable to see that it is invalid or without jurisdiction."

[10] Mukherjea J. did not agree with the view of Derbyshire C. J., and considered that it was not proper to direct that mesne profits should be determined in execution proceedings, and stated :

"The direction regarding mesne profits is only a preliminary decree and it would be against the whole scheme of the present Civil Procedure Code to suppose that there could be an executing Court to carry out the directions of the preliminary decree before the final decree was passed . . . . . It is a direction, in my opinion, which is not proper and is manifestly contradictory to the express provisions of the Code."

[11] He, however, agreed that where such a direction was made, it was not a nullity.

[12] In the present case the decree in question was confirmed by the Privy Council which in its judgment pointed out that no objection had been taken to the manner in which that Court had dealt with mesne profits, and that the judgment of that Court on these matters would stand. But whether the decision of the appellate Court was or was not right, it was not, in any case open to the lower Court to question the appellate decree. Its plain duty was to carry out its directions. The Sub-Judge, Mr. Bhavnani, was therefore right in holding that the application under O. 20, R. 12, Civil P. C., was under the circumstances one which he could not proceed upon.

[13] It was pressed before us that the invalidation of the proceedings before the Commissioner would result in quite unnecessary waste of time, that it made very little difference whether the Commissioner took accounts under the orders of the executing Court on an application in execution, or of the Court hearing the suit, on an application under O 20, R. 12, Civil P. C., particularly when the same Judge presided in the Court in each case. But this unfortunate result is clearly due to the parties adopting a misconceived course. If a proper application, in order and in time, can and should be made, it should be possible for the parties and the Court to put to good purpose what has already been done. But whether that is or is not possible cannot affect the legal position.

[14] The appeal is dismissed with costs.

H a Kutchi Memon died in 1909 leaving behind him two sons A and B. Prior to his death H had disinherited A under a will, and since the death of H, B remained in exclusive possession of the property of the deceased. At no time did B treat A as a co-sharer in the property left by H. A died subsequently and his widow sued B in 1939 for partition and possession of half share in the property left by H:

Held, that the suit was barred by limitation under Art. 127. Since H's death B having remained in adverse possession for more than 12 years the title if any of A to the property was extinguished. [Para 11]

(b) Evidence Act (1872), S. 90 — Will, 30 years old and produced from proper custody— Presumption is that it is genuine and duly executed.

In the case of a will which is more than 30 years old and produced from proper custody a presumption arises under S. 90 that the will was a genuine document and validly executed. The presumption must also extend to the due execution of the will: 34 A. I. R. 1947 P. C. 15, Foll. [Para 12]

(c) Hindu law — Applicability—Kutchi Memons — Law of survivorship and acquisition of interest in ancestral property by birth not applicable.

A Kutchi Memon governed by the Hindu law in matters of succession and inheritance is not governed by the law of survivorship or acquisition of interest in the ancestral property by birth, as in the case of a Hindu joint family joint in food, worship and estate: 1 A. I. R. 1914 Bom. 17; 2 A. I. R. 1915 Bom. 151 and 29 S. L. R. 366, Rel. on. [Para 13]

(d) Hindu law — Maintenance — Widowed daughter-in-law — Son dying after lifetime of his father without leaving any property — His widow is not entitled to maintenance out of property left by her father in-law.

Under the Hindu law the condition precedent attaching to the moral liability of a father-in-law to maintain his daughter in-law is the predecease of his married son. Hence where a son who has no share in the property of his father dies after the lifetime of his father without leaving any property, his widow is not entitled to maintenance out of the property left by her father-in-law. The reason is that there being no moral liability on the father in-law it cannot be transmitted as a legal liability to his heirs and legal representatives.

Tikamdas Bassarmal—for Appellant.

Keshowdas Dalpatrai—for Respondents.

Thadani J. — This is an appeal from the decision of the learned First Class Subordinate Judge of Sukkur in which he dismissed the plaintiff-appellant's suit with costs.

[2] The suit was instituted by one Mt. Saran in forma pauperis against her husband's brother for partition and separate possession of half-share in certain properties mentioned in lists A, B, C and D annexed to the plaint and for mesne profits. In the alternative, the plaintiff sued for the arrears of maintenance and future maintenance.

[3] The defendant Abdul Satar was a son of Haji Mooso who died in 1909 leaving two widows, two sons, Abdul Satar and Abdul Karim the husband of the plaintiff, and two daughters. Abdul Karim died two years after his father Mooso. Abdul Satar died during the pendency of the suit and his legal representatives have been brought on the record.

[4] It was the case of the appellant that her husband died some eleven years before the institution of the suit in 1939, and that as she was the sole heir of her husband Abdul Karim, she was entitled to Abdul Karim's share in the properties shown in the schedule annexed to the plaint, and that in any case she was entitled to maintenance.

[5] The respondents, case was that the appellant's husband Abdul Karim was disinherited by Haji Mooso in 1907; that thereafter Abdul Karim lived separately from his father; on 17-10 1907, Haji Mooso made a will leaving his entire property to Abdul Satar; it was denied that the house mentioned in list C was purchased from the cash and rents of the property left by Haji Mooso; the deposit of ornaments was also denied. It was further alleged that Abdul Karim died on 20-10-1911, and that a false allegation was made that Abdul Karim died 11 years before 128 Sind suit within the period of limitation. In regard to the alternative claim for maintenance, the defence was that the appellant was not entitled to maintenance in law, nor was she entitled to maintenance at the rate claimed.

[6] On the pleadings a number of issues were raised. Issue 4 was: 'Is the suit in time'? Issue 6 was: 'Did Haji Mooso make a will alleged in the written statement? If so, what is the consequence'?

[7] On the question of limitation, the learned Judge held the suit for partition to be time-barred. In regard to the claim for maintenance, he held that the suit for maintenance was competent, but took the view that as no property was left by the appellant's husband, she is not entitled to be maintained by the respondents. In the result the learned Judge dismissed the suit with costs.

[8] In dealing with the issue of limitation, the learned Judge held that it was satisfactorily established from the evidence of the appellant and from that of her witnesses Abdul Kadir and Jan Muhammad, that the appellant's husband Abdul Karim died some 25-30 years before the institution of the suit. At the time of giving evidence the appellant was about sixty years old. She had stated in her evidence that she was married when she was 12 years old and that her husband died 12 or 13 years after her marriage. In other words, the appellant was 25 years old when her husband died. The learned Judge therefore came to the conclusion that the appellant's husband must have died some 35 years before the institution of the suit in 1939. The appellant had also stated in her evidence that she had handed over the ornaments involved in the suit, to Abdul Satar after her husband's death some 30 years ago, and that her husband died at the age of 30 years, two or three years after his father Haji Mooso's death; in other words, the appellant's husband died in 1914 or 1915, that is to say, some 25 years before the institution of the suit.

[9] One of the witnesses Abdul Kadir examined by the appellant stated in his evidence that the appellant's husband died two or three years after Haji Mooso. Similarly, another witness Jan Muhammad stated that Haji Mooso died 20 years before he gave evidence. Jan Muhammad at the time of giving evidence was 45 years old. The respondents on the other hand produced the death certificate of the appellant's husband, which showed that he died on 20-10-1911. On this evidence the learned Judge was clearly right in coming to the conclusion that the appellant instituted the suit more than 25 years after the death of her husband.

[10] The respondent's case is that the appellant's husband was disinherited by his father Haji Mooso in 1907 and that from 1907 the appellant's husband was living separately from his father, who alone was in possession of the property in suit. On the death of Haji Mooso which occurred, according to the evidence, 2 years before the appellant's husband died in 1911, Abdul Satar became the sole owner of the properties left by Haji Mooso. Abdul Satar's possession of the immovable property in suit after the death of Haji Mooso is admitted by the appellant herself in her evidence. She says, Abdul Satar used to collect rents and carry out repairs to the property. On the evidence the learned Judge rightly came to the conclusion that Abdul Satar was in exclusive possession of the property in suit after the death of Haji Mooso.

[11] There is no doubt that the possession of Abdul Satar was adverse to Abdul Karim who had been disinherited by Haji Mooso in 1907, and that this adverse possession of Abdul Satar which commenced on the death of Haji Mooso in 1909 was never arrested and at the end of 12 years in 1921 Abdul Karim's title, if he had any, was extinguished. The present suit was not brought until 1939. At no time did Abdul Satar treat the appellant as a co-sharer in the property left by Haji Mooso after his death. During the lifetime of Haji Mooso the appellant's husband had no share in the property. It is true that the parties to the suit are Kutchi Memons governed in matters of succession and inheritance by Hindu law, but that branch of Hindu law which makes a Hindu son at birth a co-parcener in the ancestral property is not applicable to Kutchi Memons: cf. 16 Bom. L. R. 224.[1] The appellant's husband was therefore not a co-sharer of Haji Mooso during the lifetime of Haji Mooso, assuming that any portion of the property in suit was inherited by Haji Mooso from his father. The appellant's husband was disinherited by Haji Mooso under his will made 2 years before his death. The learned Judge was right in coming to the conclusion that since the death of Haji Mooso in 1907 his son Abdul Satar was in exclusive possession of the property and Abdul Satar's possession was, on the facts of this case, adverse to that of the appellant's husband. The suit brought by the appellant for partition having been instituted after the lapse of 12 years, it was clearly out of time by reason of Art. 127, Limitation Act.

[12] The property alleged to have been left by the deceased Haji Mooso is mentioned by the appellant in Lists A and B and includes some cash. As regards the immovable property mentioned in List A there is no dispute and we have held that the appellant is not entitled to partition. In List B the property consisted of some furniture. The learned Judge has taken the view that the appellant has failed to prove that Haji Mooso had left any furniture or cash. We see no reason to differ from him.

[13] Before dealing with the appellant's right to maintenance, it is necessary to revert to the will made by Haji Mooso in 1907. We agree with the learned Judge that the will came from proper custody and was more than 30 years old. A presumption therefore arises under S. 90, Evidence Act, that the document evidencing the will was a genuine document and was validly executed. Mr. Tikamdas for the appellant contends that the will must nevertheless be proved to have been signed by the testator. But on the authority of the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in 1946-2 M. L. J. 453,[2] the presumption must also extend to the due execution of the will.

[14] It was next contended by Mr. Tikamdas that Haji Mooso being a Kutchi Memon could not dispose of his property by will. The contention, however, has been negatived by the Bombay High Court and this Court when it was Judicial Commissioner's Court in 41 Bom. 181,[3] and 29 S. L. R. 366.[4] As we have already stated, a Kutchi Memon governed by Hindu law in matters of succession and inheritance is not governed by the law of survivorship or acquisition of interest in the ancestral property by birth, as in the case of Hindu joint family joint in food, worship and estate.

[15] The question of maintenance under the Hindu law of a widowed daughter-in-law is dealt with in para. 564 of Mulla's Hindu law, 10th Edn. The learned Judge has held that the appellant's husband left no property of his own and had no share in the property left by Haji Mooso, a finding with which we agree. Moreover, it is clear that the appellant became a widow after the death of her father-in-law Haji Mooso. Haji Mooso was under no moral obligation to maintain the appellant during the lifetime of her husband. There was, therefore, no moral liability attaching to the estate of Haji Mooso which could be transmitted as a legal liability to the heirs and legal representatives of Haji Mooso upon their succession to the estate of Haji Mooso.

[16] Mr. Tikamdas for the appellant has argued the question of maintenance of a daughter-in-law whose husband has left no estate, by the heirs of her father-in-law on the supposition that it makes no difference in law whether or not a daughter-in-law is widowed during the lifetime of her father-in-law. Mr. Tikamdas has, however, been unable to show us any authority for the proposition that where a daughter-in-law is widowed after the death of her father-in-law, she is entitled to maintenance out of the estate left by the father-in-law to his heirs.

condition precedent attaching to the moral 129
lity of a father-in-law to maintain his daughter-in-law is the predecease of his married son. In this view it is not necessary to consider the effect of the will made by Haji Ramzan on the right of maintenance of the appellant by the respondents, and we would, therefore, refrain from assenting to or dissenting from all following reported cases which were cited before us: I. L. R. (1939) Mad. 242,[5] 27 Bom. 607,[6] 25 Bom. 263,[7] 30 I. A. 127;[8] A. I. R. 1924 Cal. 364;[9] A. I. R. 1929 ALL. 751.[10] On an appropriate occasion we will indicate our preference.

[17] On any view of the case we think the appellant is not entitled to maintenance from the estate of Haji Ramzan in the hands of the respondents.

[18] We would accordingly affirm the judgment and decree of the lower Court and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Civil Revn. Appln. No. 79 of 1945, Decided on 5th December 1947, to revise an order of Small Cause Court, Nawabshah, D/- 29-9-1945.

Punjab Relief of Indebtedness Act (7 [VII] of 1934), S. 4—Decree for money passed by a Court of competent jurisdiction in Sind—Decision of Punjab Debt Conciliation Board under Punjab Relief of Indebtedness Act which does not apply to Sind cannot be pleaded as discharge of debt : 27 A. I. R. 1940 Bom. 362, Rel. on. [Paras 8 and 9]

Case referred :—

1. ('40) 27 A. I. R. 1940 Bom. 362 : I. L. R. (1940) Bom. 799 : 191 I. C. 653, Shankar v. Manek Lal.

Balkrishna H. Lulla — for Applicant.

Thadani J. — This is an application under S. 25, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, 9 [IX] of 1887, arising out of an order passed by the Judge, Small Cause Court, Nawabshah, dated 29th September 1945, in which he dismissed the applicant's prayer for withdrawal of a sum of Rs. 153-1-0 which previously by his order dated 8th June 1945 he had ordered to be paid to the applicant decree-holder.

[2] The applicant had instituted a suit in the Small Cause Court, Nawabshah, against the firm of Lalsing Thakursingh for the recovery of a sum of Rs. 132-10-6 as compensation for short delivery made under a contract relating to the sale of a grass chopping machine. In due course, the applicant's suit was decreed, and on 18th May 1945, the applicant applied for execution of the decree by calling for the decretal amount from the Savings Bank Account of the opponent firm in the Nawabshah Post-Office. The Court application, and the amount of Rs. granted was deposited with the Nazir of the Court.

[3] It appears that on 15th June 1945 the Small Cause Court, Nawabshah received a letter dated 6th June 1945 from the Chairman of the Debt Conciliation Board, Jullunder, in which the Chairman stated :

"I have the honour to inform you that the proceedings pending in this Board under the Punjab Relief of Indebtedness Act, 1934, in pursuance of the application dated 24th February 1945 about which an intimation was sent to you on 24th February 1945 have terminated.

2. The date of hearing fixed in your Court as mentioned in the earlier intimation referred to above was 14th March 1945."

This letter was considered by the Court on 29th September 1945 as a result of which the applicant's application for the withdrawal of the decretal amount paid into Court was dismissed.

[4] It is contended on behalf of the applicant judgment-creditor that the Punjab Act 7 [VII] of 1934 being a Provincial Act extends only to the Punjab and cannot apply to the Province of Sind, and that in acting upon the letter of the Chairman of the Debt Conciliation Board, Jullunder, the Small Cause Court Judge, Nawabshah, had given effect to an ex-territorial Act in a matter pending in his Court.

[5] We do not propose to consider other grounds taken in the application, for instance, that the debt was a commercial debt, and as such, not within the cognizance of the Debt Conciliation Board of the Punjab. We propose to decide this application on the ground that the Punjab Debt Conciliation Act has no application to the Province of Sind ; and that the decrees passed by the Courts in Sind cannot be rendered infructuous merely because an application has been made to the Punjab Debt Conciliation Board, and the Board has acted under the provisions of the Punjab Act.

[6] The record of the case does not show where the contract of sale was made, but as delivery was made at Nawabshah the Small Cause Court Nawabshah had jurisdiction to try the suit. Whatever might have been the nature of the debt, on the passing of a decree by a Court of competent jurisdiction, it became a decretal debt, and we cannot see how a decision of the Debt Conciliation Board of the Punjab can affect debts decreed by a Court in this Province.

[7] We have been referred to a case, A. I. R. 1940 Bom. 362,[1] in which question arose how far a civil Court in Bombay could entertain a suit to recover a debt which had been duly declared to be discharged by the Debt Conciliation Board of the Central Provinces. Beaumont C. J. delivering the judgment of the Division Bench observed (p. 363) :

"Where questions arise as to whether the incidents of a contract should be governed by the law of one country or of another, the general rule is that all the rights and incidents arising under the contract are governed by the proper law of the contract, and in this case the law of the contract is the law of the place where the contract was made. One of the incidents which is governed by the law of the contract is the method of discharge of the contract. If under the proper law of the contract, such contract can be discharged by some method other than performance, such a discharge will be recognized in British India. The principle is stated in Dicey's 'Conflict of Laws,' Edn. 5, R. 126, p. 503 : 'A discharge from any debt or liability under the bankruptcy law of the country where the debt or liability is to be paid or satisfied is a discharge therefrom in England.' Bankruptcy is, of course, one method by which a debt may be discharged other than by performance, but the same principle applies to any other special method of discharge. No doubt, the Province of Bombay and the Central Provinces are both part of British India, but in my opinion, where the law of one Province of British India is distinct from the law of another Province, the two Provinces must be regarded for the purposes of this rule as foreign countries inter se. In my view, the proper law of this contract is the law in force in the Province of Bombay, and the contract cannot be discharged by a method recognized in the Central Provinces, but not in Bombay. I think that the view of the learned District Judge was right, and a discharge of this debt under the C. P. Debt Conciliation Act is no defence to the suit filed in the Nandurbar Court. The application will be rejected with costs."

[8] In the case before us, the contractual debt had merged into a decretal debt, the discharge or satisfaction of which would be made in a manner laid down in the Code of Civil Procedure or any other law for the time being in force dealing with discharge of decretal debts. There is no provision, as far as we know, in any Act in force in the Province of Sind, whereby a decision of the Punjab Debt Conciliation Board can be pleaded as a discharge of a debt, decreed by a Court in Sind.

[9] As Beaumont C. J. has observed :

"A discharge of this debt under the C. P. Debt Conciliation Act is no defence to the suit filed in the Nandurbar Court."

If it was not a defence to the suit, much less can it operate as a defence to discharge a debt that has been decreed.

[10] We would accordingly set aside the order of the learned Judge whereby he refused to hand over the amount deposited in Court to the applicant until the appeal of the decree holder to the District Court of Jullunder had been disposed of. We order the amount deposited to be paid to the judgment-creditor. The application is allowed with costs.

Malik Jiandkhan v. Province of Sind.

Suit No. 296 of 1941, Decided on 22-12-1947.

Mahomedan law — Marriage — Proof of—Acknowledgment — Essentials of, stated.

Amongst Mahomedans no particular ceremonies are required for a marriage. The question of marriage is one of fact and the presumption does not arise merely from the fact of some years of cohabitation. It is required to be proved that the man treated the woman as his wife and had recognized her as such, not merely casually but with the intention and knowledge of giving her the status of a wife. In respect of acknowledgment of a son it is further necessary that the acknowledgment must be as of a legitimate son. Mere acknowledgment of paternity is not sufficient to raise a presumption of legitimacy or marriage. In the event of disproof of marriage, no amount of acknowledgment can make the presumption override the fact and persuade the Court to decide the matter on the presumption : 9 A. I. R. 1922 P. Dingomal Narainsing — for Plaintiff.
B. H. Lulla and E. V. Castellino — for Defendants 1 & 2 respectively.

Tyabji C. J. — The plaintiff in this suit seeks a declaration that he is a legitimate son of Safarkhan, a paternal-uncle of Malik Bulakhan son of Dodakhan (the second Bulakhan), a first class jagirdar holding extensive Jagir lands in the districts of Dadu, Karachi and Hyderabad, who died on 22nd January 1939. Malik Bulakhan was the last of a long line of Maliks who, as "gadinishins" or "pagdars" were entitled to certain lands and privileges and lived at Thano Bulakhan. The British conferred a jaghir on Malik Bulakhan son of Hyderkhan (the first Bulakhan) and under the terms of the grant the Jaghir was to be regranted on the death of each jaghirdar to the senior lineal male descendant of the first grantee. The first Bulakhan died on 31st May 1853. On the death of the second Bulakhan in 1939 the plaintiff claimed the jaghir as a son of Safarkhan, who was a grandson of the first grantee, there being no other lineal male descendant of the first grantee. It was, however, disputed that the plaintiff was a legitimate son of Safarkhan, although it was admitted that he was a son of Safarkhan by a woman named Hurmat. An inquiry was held by the Collector (Mr. Nur Nabi) under the Pensions Act of 1871, and on 23rd October 1939 the Collector decided that the plaintiff, though a son of Safarkhan, was not a legitimate son, as the plaintiff's mother Hurmat was not legally married to Safarkhan, and the plaintiff was not, therefore, entitled to the jagir. An appeal was made against this decision to the Revenue Commissioner (Mr. Clee), who by his order dated 3rd June 1940 decided in favour of the plaintiff, holding him to be a legitimate son of Safarkhan, and directed that the jagir be conferred upon the plaintiff. The Government of Sind appealed against that decision, and the matter was referred to the Revenue Tribunal which, on 27th March 1941, passed the following order :

"The Tribunal consider that the respondent Alibuxkhan alias Malik Jiandkhan has not clearly established the fact of his legitimate birth and think that the Collector's order was proper. They are therefore pleased to set aside the order of the Revenue Commissioner and to confirm the order of the Collector of Dadu. The jagir will accordingly lapse to the Government. If, however, the respondent establishes the fact of his legitimate birth in a Court of law in proceedings to which the Government is made a party, the jagir should be restored to him. If Government's permission is necessary to file the requisite suit in a Court of law, the said permission should be granted."

[2] In consequence of this the plaintiff filed this suit on 13th August 1941. In the plaint the plaintiff's case is stated as follows :

"9. The plaintiff submits that his mother Mt. Hurmat was lawfully wedded to his father Malik Safarkhan, the Nikah ceremony having been performed about 70 years ago. Both his father and mother lived as husband and wife until the death of his father in about 1892. Thereafter she continued to remain his widow, she being still alive. Further the plaintiff was always acknowledged by his father as his legitimate son and both the plaintiff and his mother were always looked upon and treated by all the family members including the deceased Malik Bulakhan as the widow and legitimate son of the deceased Safarkhan.

10. The plaintiff further submits that as a matter of fact, the plaintiff's father Safarkhan married only one wife and she was Mt. Hurmat and likewise Mt. Hurmat had only one husband and that was Malik Safarkhan.

11. The plaintiff claims that he is the legitimate son of Malik Safarkhan and a direct male descendant of the original grantee Malik Bulakhan."

[3] Defendant 1, the Province of Sind, and defendant 2, Mt. Acherbai, a sister of the last Malik, Bulakhan, have disputed the plaintiff's contention, that Mt. Hurmat was the wife of Safarkhan and the plaintiff was a legitimate son. In their written statements the defendants also challenged the jurisdiction of the Court and the maintainability of the suit as framed, and raised other legal defences, and the following issues were framed :

"1. Has the Court jurisdiction ?

2. Is the suit barred under S. 4 of Pensions Act, 1871?

3. Whether the notice referred to in para. 12 of the plaint is invalid ?

4. Whether the plaintiff is the legitimate son of late Safarkhan ?

4a. Is the suit as framed maintainable ?

5. Is the plaintiff entitled to the relief claimed ?

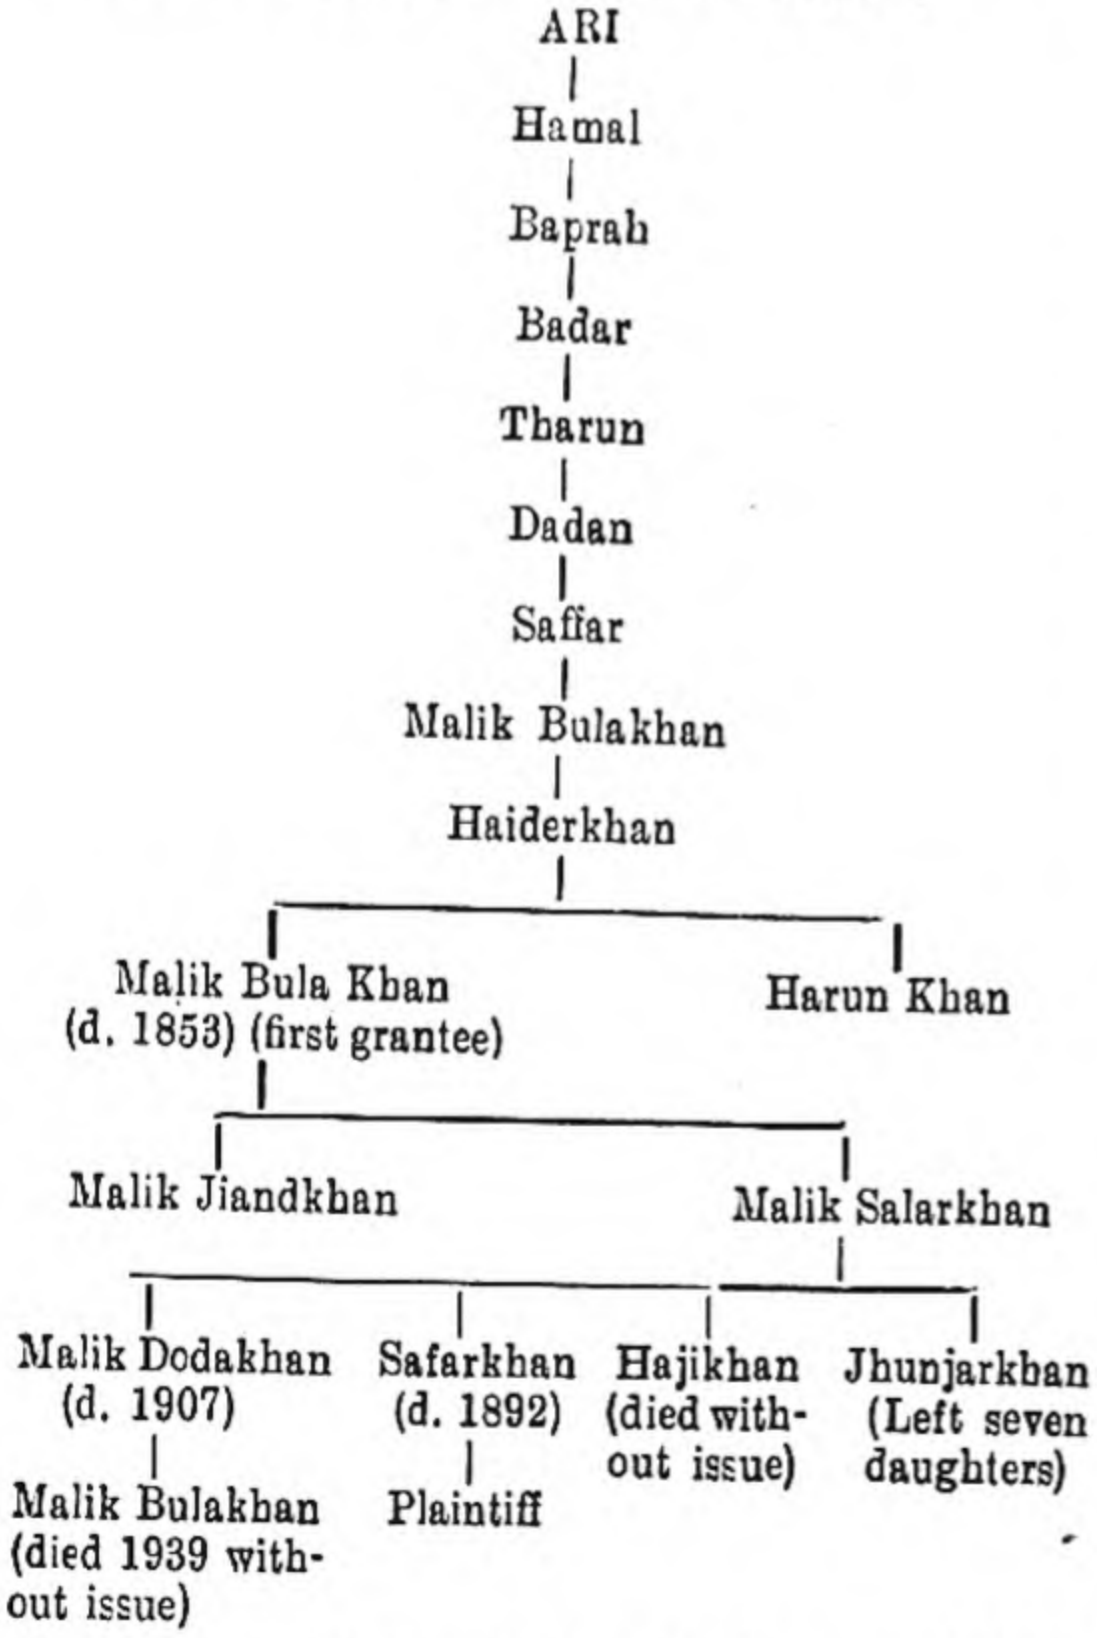
6. General."

When the case was heard, however, the defendants dropped all issues except issue 4, and in fact made it clear that, far from wishing to press any of the legal objections raised in issues 1, 2, 3 and 4A, they desired that this Court should try and decide issue 4, which is thus the only issue in this case.

[4] Eighteen witnesses have been examined on behalf of the plaintiff. It is contended on his behalf that he has proved the marriage of Safarkhan and Hurmat, and also proved that Safarkhan and the members of the Malik family had throughout acknowledged the plaintiff as a legitimate son of Safarkhan. Seven witnesses have been examined on behalf of the defendants to deny those allegations.

[5] Before dealing with the contentions of the parties, it appears advisable first to set out certain undisputable facts, which were either admitted or were not seriously questioned by the parties after the evidence in the case was led, and which are clearly established.

[6] The following geneological table produced by the plaintiff shows the relationship of the successive Maliks of Thano Bula Khan :



The British conferred the Jagir upon Malik Bulakhan son of Haiderkhan, who died on 31.5.1853. He was succeeded by Jiandkhan, who died without any male issue, whereupon the Jagir was conferred upon Salarkhan, the younger brother of Jiandkhan. Salarkhan was succeeded by his son Dodakhan, who died in 1907, when Bula Khan the son of Dodakhan succeeded. As has been mentioned before, Bula Khan left no male issue. Safarkhan, the second son of Salarkhan, died in 1892. Hajikhan, the third son of Salarkhan, died some years later, and Jhunjarkhan, the fourth son of Salarkhan, died still later on 12-3-1932.

[7] The Maliks of Bulakhan and the members of their family have for many generations had their principal residence at Thano Bula Khan within what is known as the "Haveli" of the Maliks, each member of the family having a portion of the "Haveli" allotted to him by the reigning Malik.

[8] When Safarkhan was a young man, there was a young slave girl, Hurmat, who was working as a maid-servant inside the "Haveli." She belonged to the caste of Gadas who were mostly labourers. Her father Tahir was also a household servant in the 'Haveli' and her other relations were dependants of the Malik family. Safarkhan became enamoured of Hurmat, and eloped with her without the knowledge or permission of the Malik or of Hurmat's relations. As plaintiff's counsel elicited from Pir Bakar Shah, Hurmat had been betrothed by her parents to one Master Masood, who was an employee in the Post Office at Thano Bulakhan. It is difficult to say exactly when this occurred but all parties have accepted the suggestion of Mr. Dingomal, the learned counsel for the plaintiff, that this took place about 1873. Safarkhan took Hurmat away to a place called Dadhoon, which was some 5 miles further away from Thano Bula Khan than Kotri, Kotri being some thirty miles away. This elopement caused great offence to the Malik and the members of the family, and Safarkhan lived away at Dadhoon for several years. A male and a female child were born to Safarkhan and Hurmat while they lived at Dadhoon, but these children died very young. Safarkhan did not come back to Thano Bula Khan for several years after the elopement.

[9] It is also clear that when Safarkhan returned to Thano Bula Khan with Hurmat he did not live within the "Haveli" of the Maliks, as the other members of the family did, but he lived, with Hurmat, in a hut some distance away from the 'Haveli,' in a locality where the neighbouring houses were occupied by Hindus, Khaskhelis and Gadas. Some attempt was made by some of the earlier witnesses, examined on behalf of the plaintiff, to show that when Safarkhan came back to Thano Bula Khan he first stayed for some time in the 'Haveli' of the Maliks with Malik Dodakhan; but the evidence of the witnesses subsequently examined on behalf of the plaintiff, for instance, of Hafiz Sumar (Ex. 31) and Natho (Ex. 26), shows that that was not true, and that Safarkhan lived, as the defendants assert, in a separate house outside the 'Haveli' from the time when he returned to Thano Bula Khan up to the time when, a couple of days before his death, he was taken into the 'Haveli' by Malik Dodakhan where Safarkhan died. Natho (Ex. 26), a maternal-cousin of Hurmat, who would necessarily know the fact, admitted :

[10] The plaintiff was born at Thano Bula Khan on 21-6-1877, and named Alibux. Safarkhan and Hurmat had another son, Hussainbaksh, who was younger than the plaintiff, who lived with Hurmat until his death at the age of about 35 in 1926 or 1927.

[11] It is admitted that when Safarkhan was about to die, a couple of days before he actually died, in 1892, he was removed into the 'Haveli' by the Malik Dodakhan. It is alleged on behalf of the plaintiff that Hurmat and her two sons, the plaintiff and Hussainbux, lived inside the 'Haveli' during the period of idat after Safarkhan's death, but this has been strenuously denied by the defendants. Except for this, however, it is clear that after his elopement with Hurmat, Safarkhan did not ever live inside the 'Haveli,' and that Hurmat and her sons had never been the inmates of the family residence of the Maliks.

[12] In February 1890 the plaintiff was sent to a Mulla School at Thano Bulakhan, which was in charge of Mulla Haji Hamid, where the plaintiff was taught to read the Kuran and the first Sindhi primar. The register of the school, Ex. 9, shows that he attended the Mulla School from February 1890 to March 1891, and that his name was entered in the register as "Alibaksh put (son of) Safarkhan Baprani." There was a District Local Board School at Thano Bula Khan, in which Jhunjarkhan, the youngest brother of Safarkhan, was a teacher. The register of this school, Ex. 20, and the entries therein, Exs. 21 and 22, show that the plaintiff joined this school on 9-12-1890 and left it on 31-7-1894. In this register in the column headed "full name of student" the plaintiff's name was entered as "Alibux Safarkhan." According to the evidence of the plaintiff, he had reached the third or fourth Sindhi standard when he left the school.

[13] It is clear from the evidence that Hussainbakhsh, the younger brother of the plaintiff, never went to any school. Nothing about what the plaintiff did during the years 1894 to 1901 after he left the school.

[14] On 13-4-1901 the plaintiff joined the police, as a mounted (camel) constable, and as the plaintiff's evidence shows, he obtained this job with the help of Jehan Khan, a younger brother of Pir Bakar Shah and an Honorary Magistrate. On the service sheet, Ex. 10, plaintiff's name was entered as "Alibaksh Safarkhan." The plaintiff continued to be a police officer until he retired in 1929. He has stated :

"I retired in 1929 as Mounted Head Constable. My pay before I retired was Rs. 36 per month. I got besides Rs. 5 as Pagi allowance, Re. 1 as literacy allowance, and Rs. 25 or Rs. 30 as horse allowance."

It may be mentioned here that there were three other police officers, recruited from the families of the jagirdar of the locality, viz. Sherdilkhan, Rahimkhan, and Mahomedkhan, each one of whom was appointed a Sub-Inspector when he joined the police.

[15] The names of all, male as well as female, members of the families of Muslim jagirdars end with an honorific suffix, such as 'Khan' in the case of males, and 'Bai' in the case of females showing the status of their families. It would be disrespectful and contrary to custom to refer to such a person by a name without the suffix. Thus the sons of Salarkhan were called and always referred to as Dodakhan, Safarkhan, Hajikhan and Jhunjarkhan. Defendant 2, who is a daughter of Dodakhan, was called Achar Bai, and the name of Bula Khan's wife was Nazil Bai. It is significant that the plaintiff's name as entered in the school registers, Exs. 9, 21 and 22, and in the service sheet, Ex. 10, was "Alibux." It is clear that the plaintiff was throughout called "Alibaksh," and not "Alikhan" or "Alibakhshkhan." The first witnesses examined by the plaintiff, Utumal and Chaturmal, throughout referred to the plaintiff as "Alibux." The plaintiff's brother was throughout referred to by Utumal as "Hussain" and by other witnesses as "Hussainbuksh" never as "Hussainbukshkhan." A point was made of this while the plaintiff was being examined, and, thereafter the plaintiff attempted to make out what was clearly untrue, that he was also called Alibuxkhan sometimes. He stated :

"My name was Allibuksh. Jiandkhan is the name which they gave me at the dastarbandi ceremony. I was also some times called Allibukshkhan by people of my rai. When my name was asked I said Alibuksh and not Alibuxkhan, because I do not like to call myself Khan. I gave my name alias as Jiandkhan and not Jiand because that was the name they gave to me. I used to be called Alibaksh and also Alibuxkhan by people."

It is also clear that the plaintiff's mother was always called "Hurmat" only. (His Lordship quoted a portion of deposition of one witness and proceeded :)

Similarly, plaintiff's wife has been throughout called Mima.

[16] This Mima was a woman of the Meraji Birohi caste, admittedly of a very low status, who was a widow when the plaintiff married her in 1918. The plaintiff admitted :

"It is true that girls in the families of Maliks are generally married to persons nearly related to them, or to men in the families of other Maliks."

He stated :

"I do not know whether girls are frequently married to men much younger than themselves," but it is a matter of common knowledge that that is the case. The plaintiff admitted that although defendant 2, Acher Bai, was a cousin of the plaintiff who had never married, there was never any question of his marrying Acher Bai or any other girl from the neighbouring family of the Hamalani Maliks. Admittedly there had been many marriages between members of the family of the Hamalani Maliks and members of the family of the Maliks of Thano Bula Khan. He attempted to explain this by saying :

"Acharbai did not wish to marry, and I did not wish to marry her, and that is why I did not marry her .... I never offered or sent a proposal for any Hamalani girl. I have never sent a proposal for any other girl except Mima. Neither Doda Khan, nor Bula Khan ever told me that I should marry (?) a girl of a good family."

Further, although the plaintiff had a son who was 25 years old and Jhunjarkhan left seven daughters, the youngest of whom was 18 or 19 years old, there never was any question of the plaintiff's son marrying one of the daughters of Jhunjarkhan.

[17] It is also clear that Hurmat, who died in 1942, was a very poor woman, who had to support herself by working as a labourer and as a midwife. This is not only clear from the evidence given by the defendant's witnesses, but from the evidence of Sub-Inspector Lutf Ali Ex. 45, one of the plaintiff's witnesses, who admitted :

"In 1910 my wife and my children were living with me at Thano Bula Khan. I came to know where the plaintiff's house was. I saw the plaintiff's mother then. Plaintiff's mother was then working as a midwife."

It is obvious that family prestige and custom would not ordinarily permit one of the ladies of a family like the Malik family, who was acknowledged as a member of the family, to go about working as a midwife or a labourer.

[18] Another circumstance on which great reliance is placed by the defendants, as weighing heavily against the plaintiff's contention, is the location of the graves of the plaintiff's brother Husseinbux, and the plaintiff's wife Mima in the graveyard at Thano Bula Khan. In this graveyard there is a portion reserved for the graves of the family of the Pirs, and another portion which is reserved for the graves of the members of the family of the Maliks. The graves of the members of the family of the Maliks are on a raised platform, all built up in a very similar manner. These graves are in a line running east to west. The platform on which the graves are built is known as the "thalla" of the "Maliks." In each of these graves the body is placed in the customary manner on its right side with the head to the north and the feet to the south, so that it faces the west. The row of graves progressed from east to west, that is to say, each member of the family who died was buried next to the person who had died last, immediately next and to the west of the last grave in the row. The evidence clearly shows, and there is no dispute about this, that the last persons to be buried in the row on the thalla in order were Salarkhan, Safarkhan, Dodakhan, Hajikhan, Jhunjarkhan, Bulakhan and Nazilbai. The grave of Nazilbai is the last and the western most one, and the row ends here, as the portion to the west is reserved for the Pirs. It is clear as the evidence and the photographs show that the portion immediately to the north of the main row on the thalla is part of the portion reserved for the family of the Maliks, where there is room for another row of graves, and in the ordinary course the thalla would be extended, as and when more graves were built, in the row and immediately to the north of the existing main row. In this row to the north of the thalla, and near its eastern end, where it would commence, there are three very small graves. These are the three graves of the children of Jhunjarkhan, each of whom died when a few months old. To the south of the thalla and immediately to the south of the graves in the middle of the row on the thalla there are three unbuilt full sized graves, which are of Husseinbux, Mima and Hurmat. Further to the east of these three graves, in the same row to the south of the thalla, there are other graves of Gadas, and to the south of these are the graves of Palaris of the Balfat caste. Husseinbuksh, the brother of the plaintiff, died in 1926 or 1927, that is before Hajikhan, Jhunjarkhan, Bulakhan and Nazilbai. Mima died after Hajikhan and before Jhunjarkhan. There is no question about Jhunjarkhan's children having been buried as members of the family of the Maliks in a portion reserved for the family. The explanation of the fact that these children were not buried in the main row is that the graves of only adult members of the family would be made in the main row, and as is usual, the smaller graves of children would be placed separately. The fact that Husseinbux and Mima were not buried in the main row on the thalla would show that they were not regarded as members of the family. (After discussing the evidence of some witnesses his Lordship continued :) It is argued on behalf of the defendants with considerable force that if Safarkhan had been married to Hurmat, and the marriage had been acknowledged by the Malik family, Hussainbux the son of Safarkhan would have been treated as a member of the Malik family and would have been buried next to Dodakhan, and that Mima, the wife of the plaintiff would have been buried next to Hajikhan on the thalla, and not "with the uncles and aunts" of Sumar, that is among the Gadas.

[19] (His Lordship next referred to certain incidents which had been relied upon as significant and proceeded further:) Another admitted fact is that there was no question or controversy ever raised as to whether the plaintiff was or was not a legitimate son of Safarkhan, before Bula Khan's death. This fact was admitted and in fact asserted by both sides, and each side in its turn attempted to base an argument on it. It is also admitted that immediately after the death of Bulakhan the plaintiff as well as some other persons, including Sher Dilkhan, a member of the family of the Hamalani Maliks, laid claims to the Jagir. Pir Bakar Shah the acknowledged Pir of the family of the Maliks of Thano Bula Khan, who had officiated at the ceremonies when the pag was conferred on malik Bula Khan and his predecessor Malik Doda Khan, refused to support the plaintiff's claim. He has stated:

"As we are the Pir Murshids of the Malik Family, we have been the persons who tied the turbans, conferred the 'pag' on the Maliks. I tied the 'pag' on Dodakhan and Bula Khan. The Hindus and Mussalmans came to me after the death of Bula Khan and asked me to confer the 'pag' on the plaintiff, urging that unless the pag was so conferred, the Jaghir would be confiscated and all would suffer. I, however, refused, as I was not willing to lend myself to an untruth. The plaintiff's own people, the Babranis and Hamalanis, did not want me to tie the turban on the plaintiff, as they stated that the plaintiff was not the legitimate son of Safar Khan."

Usually the dastarbandi ceremony, when the pag is conferred on a successor, takes place within a short time of the death of the pagdar, and the previous dastarbandi ceremonies of the Maliks of Thano Bula Khan had taken place at Thano Bula Khan. In this case no dastarbandi ceremony took place until 26-9-1939, when a gathering took place at Jhimpir, at the instance of the plaintiff, at which the pag was conferred on the plaintiff by the plaintiff's supporters. The plaintiff has admitted:

"I am the only Malik among the Thano Bula Khan Maliks whose dastarbandi ceremony took place at Jhimpir. In the cases of Bula Khan and Dodakhan the ceremonies took place at Bula Khan. . . . The delay in the dastarbandi ceremony in my case, which took place 8 months after Bula Khan's death there was 'shor' (dispute and trouble) in this case.

[20] Another circumstance which must be borne in mind, when the evidence on the main question in the case is considered, is that it would obviously be to the interests generally of the people living at Thano Bulakhan and those connected with them to have somebody to succeed to the Jagir, and particularly would this be the case with those connected with the family of the last malik. It is not, therefore, diffiullt to understand that a person like the plaintiff who was undoubtedly connected with the Malik family, should receive a great deal of support when he claimed the Jaghir and that there should be many people who greatly desired that the plaintiff should succeed.

[21] I next come the question whether the plaintiff has succeeded in proving the nikah which, it is alleged, took place between Safarkhan and Hurmat at Kotri, somewhere about 1873. There is only one witness Chatur, Ex. 18, who has been examined as a witness of the marriage, and it is quite impossible to regard the evidence of this witness as true. (His Lordship discussed his evidence and rejected it as wholly false.) There is no other evidence of the fact of the solemnisation of the marriage and the plaintiff has wholly failed to prove this part of his case.

[22] I next turn to the evidence produced by the plaintiff in support of his contention that he was always acknowledged by his father as his legitimate son, and that the plaintiff and his mother Hurmat were always looked upon and treated by all the family members, including deceased Malik Bula Khan, as the widow and legitimate son of deceased Safarkhan. As regards the law applicable to proof of marriage by indirect evidence by acknowledgment, all that is necessary is to refer to the statement by the Privy Council in 48 Cal. 856[1] at p. 864 where their Lordships (Lord Dunedin) stated:

"Before discussing the subject, it is as well at once to lay down with precision the difference between legitimacy and legitimation. Legitimacy is a status which results from certain facts. Legitimation is a proceeding which creates a status which did not exist before. In the proper sense there is no legitimation under the Mahomedan law. Example of it may be found in other systems. The adoption of the Roman and the Hindu law effected legitimacy. The same was done under the Cannon Law and the Scotch Law in respect of what is known as legitimation per subsequens matrimonium. By the Mahomedan law a son to be legitimate must be the offspring of a man and his wife or of a man and his slave; any other offspring is the offspring of zina, that is, illicit connection, and cannot be legitimate. The term 'wife' necessarily connotes marriage; but, as marriage may be constituted without any ceremonial, the existence of a marriage in any particular case may be an open question. Direct proof may be available, but if there be no such, indirect proof may suffice. Now one of the ways of indirect proof is by an acknowledgment of legitimacy in favour of a son. This acknowledgment must be not merely of sonship, but must be made in such a way that it shows that the acknowledgor meant to accept the other not only as his son, but as his legitimate son. It must not be impossible upon the face of it; i. e., it must not be made when the ages are such that it is impossible in nature for the acknowledgor to be the father of the acknowledgee, or when the mother spoken to in an acknowledgment, being the wife of another, or within prohibited degrees of the acknowledgor, it would be apparent that the issue would be the issue of adultery or incest. The acknowledgment may be repudiated by the acknowledgee. But if none of these objections occur, then the acknowledgment has more than a mere evidential value. It raises a presumption of marriage—a presumption which may be taken advantage of either by a wife-claimant or a son-claimant. Being, however, a presumption of fact, and not juris at de jure, it is, like every other presumption of fact, capable of being set aside by contrary proof. The result is that a claimant son who has in his favour a good acknowledgment of legitimacy is in this position: The marriage will be held proved and "his legitimacy established unless the marriage is disproved. Until the claimant establishes his acknowledgment the onus is on him to prove a marriage. Once he establishes an acknowledgment, the onus is on those who deny a marriage to negative it in fact."

"Amongst Mahomedans no particular ceremonies are required for a marriage. The question whether there was a marriage or not is one of fact. That fact may be proved by direct evidence by calling witnesses who were present at the time of producing the nikahnama signed by the parties. It may be proved by indirect evidence which may raise a presumption of marriage. The question of marriage is one of fact and the presumption does not arise merely from the fact of some years of cohabitation. It is required to be proved that the man treated the woman as his wife and had recognized her as such, not merely casually but with the intention and knowledge of giving her the status of a wife. In respect of acknowledgment of a son it is further necessary that the ackowledgment must be as of a legitimate son. Mere acknowledgment of paternity is not sufficient to raise a presumption of legitimacy or marriage. In the event of disproof of marriage, no amount of acknowledgment can make the presumption override the fact and persuade the Court to decide the matter on the presumption. If marriage is proved no question of acknowledgment remains to be considered. Only when by reason of time or circumstances the question of marriage is in a state of being 'unproved' the question of acknowledgment arises, and in dealing with that question satisfactorily evidence has to be led of clear acknowledgment. If the plaintiff leads such evidence of acknowledgment of the woman as his wife or acknowledgment of a child as his legitimate child, in the absence of proof by the defendant the presumption of marriage will hold good and the plaintiff should be considered as having discharged the burden of proof."

It is clear that the evidence must be clear that the individual in question was acknowledged to be not only a son but a legitimate son, and that the existence of a valid marriage was not in fact negatived before the presumption in favour of the marriage and legitimacy could arise. A large number of rulings were discussed before me; but I consider it quite unnecessary to refer to them, and I barely mention that they included 3 M. I. A. 295;[3] 22 S. L. R. 309;[4] 26 S. L. R. 111;[5] A. I. R. 1937 P. C. 201;[6] 31 S. L. R. 71;[7] 21 I. A. 56[8] and 10 Lah. 725.[9]

[24] A very large number of witnesses have been examined on behalf of the plaintiff to prove the alleged acknowledgments. But very little of this evidence can even be relied upon as in any way bearing on the fact in question and even that is on the face of it quite valueless. (Discussion of evidence omitted.)

[25] Having dealt with the evidence given by the plaintiff and stated my reasons for holding that the plaintiff had wholly failed to prove the marriage of Safarkhan with Hurmat, and also wholly failed to prove that the plaintiff was acknowledged as a legitimate son of Safarkhan, I now turn to the evidence given by the defendants, which, in my view, clearly establishes that the plaintiff was not and was never acknowledged to be a legitimate son of Safarkhan. [After discussing the evidence, his Lordship concluded as follows :]

[26] To sum up the position, the evidence given on behalf of the plaintiff appears to me to be of very little value. On the other hand the evidence of the family witnesses, Acherbai, Baidikhan and Mahomed Aminkhan, which there is no reason whatever for disbelieving and which is very strongly supported by the evidence of Pir Bakarshah, disproves the plaintiff's claim. The most important evidence, I consider is the evidence of the admitted or undisputed circumstances, to which I have referred in the earlier part of my judgment, which, it appears to me, make it quite clear that the plaintiff and his brother Hussein Buksh were not regarded as members of the Malik family and were not treated as such.

[27] I, therefore, answer the main issue in this case (issue 4) in the negative, that is, against the plaintiff. This suit is accordingly dismissed with costs.
